This matter is so important just now, that we give it a disproportionate amount of space in this paper. It may serve as a useful background in subsequent discussion.

The Church of Christ—the world-wide Christ brotherhood, was born of the loving desire of God to bring the people of every time and clime into a divine family under the inspiration of the Christ spirit. The love that bound Peter and Paul to one another and to their Lord would bind in Christian fellowship a converted world. Christ formulated the law of life for the Church in the words, "If a man love me he will keep my words." Love is the sap in the "true vine" carrying life and growth to every branch and every leaf. Without the life of love the branch withers and dies. But love is a spiritual emotion, invisible, intangible. Words can serve but as a sign for it. Form, ceremony, can be nothing more than symbols of it.

Neither sign nor symbol can be anything more than machinery for the accomplish-

Alexander Campbell's Position

By W. T. Moore

As much is being said about what was the attitude of our pioneers toward Pedobaptists, it may be well to summarize the position of Alexander Campbell, as he is acknowledged on all hands to have been the leading spirit in our religious movement. The following statement will, I think, be accepted as a fair presentation of his position:

1. He regarded the divisions of Christendom as not only wrong, but absolutely sinful, and he labored with unceasing earnestness to break down these divisions.

2. However, he regarded even a divided Protestantism, as very much better than a united Romanism. He recognized the undeniable fact that the divisions of Protestantism were mostly if not entirely caused by intellectual differences rather than by moral differences; and therefore he believed that these differences ought to be given up for the sake of the "unity of the spirit in the bond of peace."

3. Nevertheless, he regarded the present state of Christendom as abnormal, and that it must therefore necessarily, for a while at least, be considered from that point of view. He held that intellectual mistakes must not be confounded with moral mistakes, and as the divisions of Christendom were mainly on account of intellectual mistakes, he held that very many who made these mistakes were not morally culpable. A Christian with him is one who is sincerely aiming to do the whole will of God, as he understands that will, and generally his intellectual mistakes must not be regarded as fatal to his Christian character, though they may be fatal to much Christian assurance and enjoyment.

4. Mr. Campbell regarded the divisions of Protestantism as clear indications that these Protestant churches, considered from their denominational point of view, are not entirely out of Babylon. Indeed, he regarded himself as having gradually developed to the point where he stood when he had reached his most mature Christian manhood. But believing that denominationalism is in itself a great wrong, he labored for its demolition, and was unwilling to recognize these denominational establishments or organizations as fitting representatives of the Church of Christ, though at the same time he recognized many real Christians among them, and many churches or congregations within each one of them as churches of Christ, or Christian churches, though in some important respects these assemblies or congregations were not fully up to the New Testament standard. In short, Mr. Campbell labored toward the attainment of the New Testament ideal of the church, a church that has neither "spot nor wrinkle nor any such thing;" but while this ideal must constantly be kept before us, he never failed to remember that the historic church, or the real church is one thing, and the New Testament Church or the ideal church is quite another thing. The latter is the thing to aim at; the former furnishes the material out of which this ideal church must be constructed. He also distinguished between the great Protestant bodies, separated by denominational lines, and between the churches or congregations in any one of these respective bodies. The latter he recognized as Christian, if they had the Christian character, just as much as he recogized the individual Christian wherever he found him.

5. In determining who is a Christian or a Christian congregation, he did not allow the question of immersion to be the dividing line. He regarded immersion as the only proper baptism, and he contended that a Christian church, normally and scripturally defined, required the immersion of all its members; at the same time he distinguished sharply between a man who has been sprinkled, and who conscientiously believed that he had been baptized, and one who rejected baptism entirely. In the former case he regarded the man as having sincerely obeyed the Master, as he understood the Master's will, while in the latter case there could be no obedience whatever either in spirit or form.

6. Mr. Campbell contended that many of the divisional lines, which separate Protestants from one another into what is called denominations, are purely of a political character, and really have nothing necessarily to do with the moral or religious standing of Christians, and consequently he denounced in severe terms these purely political distinctions while the real moral qualities of Christians were neglected or else not counted in the estimate as to what constitutes a real Christian.

7. His platform for Christian union was first of all to throw overboard everything that did not involve Christian character, and to make Christian character absolutely fundamental in every step toward Christian union. This position enabled him to cooperate with all Christians, however imperfect they might be in some things, if this imperfection did not absolutely involve their Christian character. From this point of view he was delighted to work with those from whom he radically differed with respect to the New Testament ideal of a Christian or the Christian Church. From this point of view he was enabled to say, many years after he was practically driven out of the Presbyterian Church, that he would have remained in that church had he been allowed to do so and at the same time speak and act in harmony with his convictions. From the same point of view he was enabled to say many years afterwards that he would have remained with the Baptists had they allowed him the same privilege he asked for himself while he was with the Presbyterians. From this point of view he did not make immersion in water the necessary separating line between churches. He distinctly affirmed that he was as willing to commune with and co-operate with many Pedobaptist churches as with Baptist churches. While he regarded the Baptist position from a scriptural point of view as superior to that of the Pedobaptists, he still regarded many Pedobaptist churches as superior in the essential claims of the Christian church to that of many Baptist churches. From this same point of view he was enabled to heartily co-operate with all sincere Christian bodies, whether they were up to his conception of New Testament teaching or not, provided always that he, as well as they, should have liberty to speak and act according to honest convictions. The Evangelical Alliance, which was formed in 1846, issued a doctrinal statement which was far more objectionable than the "Basis of Federation" issued by the Inter-Church Conference, and yet Mr. Campbell thanked God for this alliance, and in the "Harbinger" of 1847 declares emphatically that he will co-operate with this alliance as far and as long as the alliance will let him do so. This fact, if he had said nothing else, distinctly shows where he would stand to-day with respect to the federation movement. That he would throw his whole heart into it is as evident to me as that he ever spoke the earnest words he did with respect to the Evangelical Alliance.

In conclusion, I need scarcely say that I can, with ample quotations from Mr. Campbell's writings, sustain every view I have indicated in defining his position; and I have now only to remark that his position is precisely the position which has been taken by those who are advocating co-operation in the present federation movement. I have heard of no one who proposes to surrender any truth for which the Disciples have ever contended, nor does any one suppose that federation is a satisfactory finality with respect to Christian union. We all believe that Christian union can come only when we have practically set before us the New Testament ideal of both the Christian and the Christian churches, and when all are willing to work for the realization of that ideal. But most of us believe that that ideal, even as respects our own churches, has not yet been fully realized, and in the meantime we must learn to "labor and to wait," and especially to bear with one another's weaknesses, and so fulfill the law of Christ. It is believed also that one of the very best ways that can be devised for reaching the New Testament ideal is for Christians everywhere to begin to work together, to become acquainted with each other, and to try what Mr. Campbell recommends, "approaches" instead of "reproaches." Even this method may not entirely cure the evils of sectarianism, but if it does not, it seems to me the case is hopeless. Any way, I take my stand by the side of Alexander Campbell and the grand old pioneers, and by the help of God I intend to labor for Christian union by recognizing all the union that now exists, and then from this platform to work for the higher position which is the ideal of the religious movement inaugurated by the Disciples. If this is sinful or heretical, then I am a sinner and a heretic.

"The Island Beautiful"

By W. F. Richardson

He who for the first time looks upon the verdant island of Jamaica will be charmed by its beauty; and this charm will be enhanced if he is so fortunate as to tarry for a time amid its mountains and valleys. Sky and sea unite with the little spot of earth to make it one of almost ideal loveliness. From the narrow strip of lowland along the coast rise in succession the steep hills and mountains, culminating in the lofty peak of Blue Mountain, over 7,000 feet in altitude Deep and narrow valleys separate these lofty ridges, and travelers make their way over roads of all descriptions, from the government carriage road of easy grade to the merest bridle path, steep and winding, often skirting the edge of the precipice in a fashion that seems more dangerous than it really is. Everywhere the land is clothed with verdure, the steepest hillsides being often covered with a wealth of trees and shrubs that prove the depth and richness of the soil. Strange to say, the mountains are seldom bare of soil, though here and there the rock, mostly limestone, crops out. But the close network of roots that everywhere fill the earth seem to hold it in place and prevent even the heavy rains that fall throughout the island from washing bare its sharp declivities.

Like all tropical islands, fruit is found in great abundance and variety. Oranges, bananas and pineapples (which are called "pines") are the varieties most familiar to us, as those most largely shipped to America. Bananas have become the largest single article of export from Jamaica, and thousands of acres are devoted to their culture. A curious fact about this fruit is that the tree, which grows to quite stately dimensions, yields but one bunch of fruit, and then dies. About 12 to 15 months are required for the maturity of the fruit from the time of setting the shoots. The native fruits are for the most part unpalatable to the foreigner at the first taste of them, but a few are liked by every one. The mango, found everywhere in the island, tastes much like our peach, though some varieties of it are too tough and stringy to be tempting. Many kinds, however, are delicious, and the graceful trees on which they grow, with their varied foliage and bloom, or filled with fruit, are among the most common and attractive features of the scenery. The Nasebury, looking much like a russet pear, has a peculiarly sweet flavor, which I can compare to nothing in our country except maple sugar, with a dash of ripe peach. Roseapples, otaheite apples, star apples, custard apples, pawpaws, cocoanuts, breadfruit and many others abound everywhere. Some of these are insipid in flavor, but are greatly relished by the natives and by the whites who have cultivated the taste for them. Sugar plantations, which languished for many years, are again being profitably cultivated, and coffee and cocoa are exported largely.

In this country we have a "black belt," a strip of territory in the southern states where the proportion of negroes is far above the average for the whole country. Jamaica has a "white belt," much narrower and thinner than our black one, which extends around the coast. In the cities and towns along the shore there are quite a good many white people, most of them English and German, but the interior is practically an unbroken black. Of the population of about 800,000 three-fourths are full-blooded negroes, while all but about 20,000 of the other fourth are mulattoes, "brown" people, East Indian coolies and Chinese. Except in Kingston, our mission churches are almost wholly made up of blacks.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has 22 missions in the island. most of them within a radius of 40 miles of the capital city of Kingston. They are ministered to by nine ordained preachers, who are in some instances assisted by local officers of the churches, who conduct the worship in their absence. Bro. C. E. Randall and his son John and Bro. J. J. Handsaker are located in Kingston and its suburbs. Brother Randall is oldest in point of service, having spent about a score of years under our board, coming from the Baptists to us. His chief station, King's Gate, is about four miles out from the city, and quite near the residence of the governor-general of the island. Bro. John Randall has charge of the stations at Mt. Zion and Mt. Carmel, in the country, and divides with his father the labors of caring for Torrington Church, in the near suburbs of Kingston. Brother Handsaker has served the Duke Street Church in the city for something more than a year, having gone from the state of Oregon to that field. This congregation is the oldest one of our missions, and is the strongest in membership and financial ability. Bro. G. D. Purdy went to the island some eight years ago from Harrisville, N. Y. He is doing an excellent work in the Oberlin district, including stations at Oberlin, Manning's Hill, Salisbury Plain and Mt. Industry. The native ministers are brethren Arnold Shirley, of the Kalorama district; Louis Thomas, of High Gate; J. G. Hay, of Providence; H. A. Cotterell, of Buff Bay, and R. S. Bailey, of Hazel Grove. These brethren are all doing good and acceptable work for the Master and with few exceptions the churches are growing in numbers and spiritual power. The membership of the 22 churches is about 2,300 and the 22 chapels are valued, with the ground, at about $50,000, including the mission homes at several stations. They have 19 Sunday-schools, with 1,200 scholars; 17 Young People's and Junior Christian Endeavor Societies, with 889 members; 7 day schools, with 484 pupils; 4 mission auxiliaries and 2 mission bands, with a membership of over 200.

THE POST DISCOVERY
A Revelation in Human Food.

Previous to the discovery of the Post process of changing the starchy part of Wheat and Barley into a form of sugar, many people suffered from what is known as starch indigestion.

That was shown by gas and all sorts of stomach and bowel trouble (sometimes ending in appendicitis), brought on by the undigested starch in wheat, oats, white bread, cake, puddings, etc., etc.

Nature ultimately punishes any one who continually takes some medicine or drug to smooth over or nullify bad conditions of the body. The only safe way to cure such is to correct or remove the cause. Therefore it was plain to Mr Post, in working out his discovery, that people who show some weakness in digesting the starchy part of food (which is much the largest part of all we eat), must be helped by having the starch digested or transformed before being eaten. And of course the safest and truest way to do this would be to imitate nature and avoid all chemicals or outside and unnatural things. The body digests the starchy food by the following process: first the moisture or juices of the mouth and stomach, then warmth or mild heat, which grows or develops diastase from the grain. Time is also an important element, and when all work together and the human organs operate properly the starch is slowly turned into a form of sugar, as it must be before the blood will absorb it and carry the needed energy to different parts of the body. Of course if the body fails to do its work perfectly trouble sets in.

So in the making of the famous food—Grape-Nuts—moisture, warmth and time are the only things used to turn starch into sugar, thus imitating nature and keeping the human food in original purity, free from outside things and just as Mother Nature intends it shall be kept for advantageous use by her children. The food is fully cooked at the factories, and is crisp and delicious with a little thick cream poured over.

It can be softened for people with weak teeth, but is most valuable to others when it must be energetically chewed, thus bringing down the saliva from the gums to go to the stomach and help digest the entire meal, besides the use of the teeth strengthens and preserves them. Nature blesses the parts of the body that are used and not abused. Grape-Nuts food brings peace, health and comfort when people are in despair from any one of the ails resulting from undigested food.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

From Nazareth to Tiberias and the Sea of Galilee, our route lay through Cana, where "the conscious water saw its God and blushed." Five miles northeast of Nazareth the little town is beautifully situated on the ridge of a broken tableland, with fertile gardens and olive groves. There is a copious fountain and the women and children are gathered. It is a town which, like Nazareth, would delight our American President in the number of the rising generation. Here dwelt Nathanael, and here the Christ wrought his first miracle "and manifested forth his glory," and here he received the nobleman from Capernaum whose son was healed, according to his word. They show you the place where the miracle was performed, and the jars which held the wine, but the Greeks have one place with its chapel and the Latins another, and so these brethren dwell together beautifully and in unity, and you pay your money and take your choice.

We were much interested in a school here, supported by the Church Missionary Society. We heard the children sing their songs to the air of "Jesus loves me, this I know." This society has four day schools in Nazareth and three between Haifa and Nazareth, and three between Nazareth and Tiberias. The one at Cana started in 1887 and, supported by a friend in England, has about fifty pupils. The teachers in these schools are women who, for the love of Christ, dwell in these poor villages, seeking to train the little ones, "to bend the sapling and so control the tree," as the Arabs say. They see but little result in one generation, but labor in the interest of the grandchildren of those they are training. They teach the children to wash their faces, a lost art among these Mahometans, despite all their pretended ablutions, and sewing, singing, knitting, writing and simple arithmetic. By degrees they learn to think. One of the very small ones asked the Cana teacher, "Why did God need to put a mark on Cain? No one but his father, mother and one brother were alive at the time, and they would not want to kill him." These children will some time be asking that old question, always put in the question box at protracted meetings, "Where did Cain get his wife?" Strange that Galilee, the cradle of Christianity, should be sitting in the chill and loveless gloom of Islamism. Miss Frances Newton is at the head of these schools. Where a few women are now engaged in this service for little ones whom Christ loved, hundreds should find great joy.

Beyond Cana the road is what a certain body of divinity has termed "a continent of mud." For twenty miles we plowed through fields and over rocks to Tiberias. One party, headed by an eminent Denver leader in "the Restoration movement," was held up by Bedouins for trespassing. By explanations and the payment of one dollar in the current coin of the realm, they were allowed to proceed. One hour from the Sea of Galilee we came to the Horns of Hattin, or traditional Mount of Beatitudes (Matt. 5:1). From Cana Christ must have crossed this same country to go to his own city, Capernaum. "When John was cast into prison, he departed unto Galilee, and leaving Nazareth came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is by the sea, in the borders of Zebulon and Naphtali." It is wonderful how real the Scriptures seem as one reads them in Palestine. The land and the Book are in perfect accord. You read the story and you see the thing. All over the plain and on the hillsides are the "lilies of the field" (anemone coronaria). Its color is red and it grows in great profusion, carpeting every plain and luxuriantly pervading the land in every soil and all situations. "Consider the lilies"—think upon them, study the lesson they teach. It was a long, hard pull to the Horns of Hattin which the flowers helped to make easy, and then the hill with two peaks rose before us. Cautious investigators accept this as the place where the greatest sermon in the world's history was preached. It is not a majestic mountain. It slopes beautifully toward the plain and vast multitudes could conveniently come together here. It is not a rounded summit, but saddle-backed, with rising points, which give the name "Horns". Between the horns is a small plateau, and the mount itself is only a gentle elevation, yet it has a commanding position relative to the surrounding country. Two thousand feet below lies the Sea of Galilee which from this height looks like a small blue lake, though twelve miles long and six in width, and stretching away is the plain of Gennesaret, where the Crusaders in 1187, on July 5, fought the ever memorable battle of Hattin, made their last stand, and were well night annihilated by Saladin's hosts. The mount seems to be the focus of a wide region of country. Standing in the center of a vast circumference, it seems to be in the sight of all Galilee; and Galilee was then one of the most populous provinces of the Roman empire. It is almost incredible to one now visiting the country, the number of cities and villages which according to Josephus it then contained. They clustered on the side of the mountains, stretching downward to the shores of the lake below, so that Christ, sitting on this mount, seemed to have the world at his feet, and to be speaking not to his disciples only, but to the human race. "And he opened his mouth and taught them." He sits after the Oriental custom. He does not stand and raise his hand after the manner of the orator. He begins to teach his disciples and the people press closer to hear, the crowd creeps nearer to his feet. And how does he begin? With some great swelling, high-sounding note of philosophy, some abstract definition or subtile analysis? No; with a word of consolation—"Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." The masses were poor. The world was full of sufferers. Blessed—not are the rich, the great, the proud, but the poor—a new and wonderful philosophy. He is Christus consolator.

Descending to the Lake it seems to widen and lengthen until it is spread before us in great beauty, set in its circle of hills, with Hermon lifting his snowy crest in the distance, and the town of Tiberias resting beside its peaceful waters. Soon we were resting in the clean monastery and eating the delicious fish of the lake, and then in our boats rowed rapidly over its surface. My driver going up to Nazareth was a Moslem, Jesus Tawil,

KNIFED

Coffee Knifed An Old Soldier.

An old soldier, released from coffee at 72, recovered his health and tells about it as follows:

"I stuck to coffee for years although it knifed me again and again.

"About eight years ago (as a result of coffee drinking which congested my liver), I was taken with a very severe attack of malarial fever.

"I would apparently recover and start about my usual work only to suffer a relapse. After this had been repeated several times during the year I was again taken violently ill.

"The doctor said he had carefully studied my case and it was either 'quit coffee or die,' advising me to take Postum in its place. I had always thought coffee one of my dearest friends, and especially when sick, and I was very much taken back by the Doctor's decision for I hadn't suspected the coffee I drank could possibly cause my troubles.

"I thought it over for a few minutes and finally told the Doctor I would make the change. Postum was procured for me the same day and made according to directions; well, I liked it and stuck to it and since then I have been a new man. The change in health began in a few days and surprised me, and now, although I am seventy-two of age, I do lots of hard work and for the past month have been teaming, driving sixteen miles a day besides loading and unloading the wagon. That's what Postum in the place of coffee has done for me. I now like the Postum as well as I did coffee.

"I have known people who did not care for Postum at first but after having learned to make it properly according to directions they have come to like it as well as coffee. I never miss a chance to praise it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

and his three horses were El Areet, Victor, and Bedoniee; on the lake I had three Mahometans as rowers, Mahomet, blessed with three wives, Joseph, and Hussein. I asked my driver to sing. He blew his nose—the chief instrument which he used—and sang a plaintive minor strain about leaving his mother and not saying goodbye to her. He persisted in singing until I thought he would never stop. On the lake I asked the boatmen for a song, and they chanted love songs. One was about his love and the palm tree. "As long as the palm tree waves I will love my beloved." Then he sang of his sickness: "I have a disease no medicine will cure." His trouble was he was in love. I noticed the man with three wives did not join in this refrain. I thought again they would never let up. So I proposed to sing for them, and did, and this put a quietus on the fellows. It reminded me of the story of Old Dr. Jeter, who was a poor singer, and one evening when traveling in this country he was sitting in his tent trying to make melody with his voice, when a donkey brayed most piteously, and the dragoman put his head in the tent and said: "You sing one tune he think he know!"

Galilee is as fine as Loch Katrine, as exquisitely beautiful as Windermere, as perfect as Como. It has a softness and grace that speak of gentleness and mercy and peace. It is the Lake of Jesus. Here he walked and talked the greater part of three years. He strolled its pebbled beach and picked up its tiny shells. He sailed its waters, sat in a boat and taught the people on the shore, retired to the recesses of its hills to pray, and everything—its hills and waters and trees and winds and flowers and villages—all speak of the Son of Man. "It is the most sacred sheet of water this earth contains," says Dean Stanley.

Why did Christ choose the Lake? He loved nature. He was only a day's journey from his old home. He loved the people and sought them, and here they were. Galilee then had three millions of souls. He went from village to village teaching, and this is a warm climate and the people could gather out of doors and listen. Here was a little world shut in by the hills. Then here was retirement. He could teach, and when wearied go to the hills or seek rest on the calm bosom of the Lake. We pulled up the Lake to Tell Hum, claimed to be the site of Capernaum. It is hot and the waters were quiet. The men were oppressed by the heat and repeatedly dipped up the water and we all drank it. Then we raised the sail and sought a breath of air. Suddenly, as storms come on the Lake from time immemorial, a gust struck us and we were driven on the rocks and our boat nearly capsized, but we were brought to the shore and examined the ruins of Tell Hum. Authorities are divided as to its identity with Capernaum. For myself, I do not believe our Lord intended his city should be known to us. He put a condemnation upon it. As we sailed home in the balmy evening we saw, as the sun went down, here the place where the Jordan rushed into the Lake, and yonder the country of the Gadarenes, where the swine ran down into the lake and were drowned; here the shores where Chorazin and Bethsaida lay, and a fisherman casting his net near the site of the home of Peter, Andrew and Philip; yonder, Safed, the holy city of the Jews on the heights, and the great plain, and the Horns of Hattin in the distance, and here Magdala, the home of the woman who brought her sorrows and sins to the feet of Jesus. It was a great day under the Syrian sun. And at night I went out on the top of the monastery and sat down on the flat roof. The Syrian moon bathed the hills and town and waters in its mellow radiance, the boats lay motionless on the sea. the soft lapping of its waves on the shores was the only sound that came to my ears. It was a holy hour ment of the end in view. The product—the result, the loving heart—that is the important thing. That is the reason why the Christ laid down the great basis truth of Christian fellowship, viz: "By their fruits ye shall know them." By their character ye shall recognize Christians, not by their words and ceremonies.

Preaching, confession of faith, baptism, the Lord's Supper, all are simply aids ordained to help the convert attain the Christ feeling and the Christ view point. If they fail in their purpose they are worse than useless because they deceive the conscience. If one has the forms of religion without the spirit, his religious possessions are worse than nothing, but if one has somehow gained the spirit without the intentional neglect of the forms and ceremonies, he has lost but little of the real value. "Whosoever loveth is born of God."

Mistaking Forms, Doctrines, Symbols

For the spiritual values of religion is the saddest thing in human history. It is our infirmity that we are of the earth, earthy, and slow to learn how to love and live on that high plane to which the Christ is native born and where we are but adopted sons. A religious truth uttered in word or symbol is truth only half way to its destination. Its journey's end is incarnation in a life that fully expresses it. To rest content, to hold the truth of Christ in words—in theory, when it is really useless until it becomes incarnate in our lives—that is the sin of the formalist. The formalist must be taught to see, appreciate and appropriate spiritual values or he will go on to the logical outcome of his mistake and become the fully developed Pharisee. The Pharisee is one who failed to experience the transformation of his selfishness into a divine love; he enters the church to all appearances a Christian, but in reality the old animal selfishness remains unchanged. The unchanged selfish life, clad in the livery of heaven and uttering without understanding the vocabulary of Christ —that is the formalist—the Pharisee under Moses or under Christ.

Saul of Tarsus was a fine type of the Pharisee. He was trained to precise obedience in all the forms of his religion but in spirit he destroyed mercy, justice and humility, the very virtues the forms had been designated to promote. He came under the influence of Christ and it is marvelous to note the change in his character. He became the apostle of the religion of the spirit who had so long been the slave of the letter. Hear him declare, "For he is not a Jew who is one outwardly, neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Jew who is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter." When a Pharisee in the Christian church experiences a like conversion he will say: "For he is not a Christian who is one outwardly, neither is that baptism which is outward in the body; but he is a Christian who is one inwardly, and baptism is that of her heart, in the spirit and not in the letter."

Phariseeism would refuse Christian fellowship and recognition to a loving believer in Christ who had never been taught his duty in baptism and had erred through ignorance and not wilfully. The Christ spirit said in the lips of Paul, "If there is first a willing mind it is required of a man according to what he hath and not according to what he hath not." That is the keynote to which all the bands that play in the Christian union procession must set their music. God accepts the good intention when ignorance and circumstances prevent exact obedience to his commands. If God accepts men on these terms, man has no right to set up a different standard. The formalist will not see this truth. He conceives of a God so monstrous in his injustice that he demands the "pound of flesh" of exact obedience to the letter of the law under all circumstances.

It is said of Christ "the bruised reed he will not break." The formalist has no patience with bruised reeds. The word of God says, "Whosoever calleth on the name of the Lord shall be saved," but the Pharisee breaks the chain of this kindred Scripture that he may attack the victim of his bigotry.

When a man has done his work, and nothing can any way be materially altered in his fate, let him not forget his toil; but what excuse can you find for wilfulness of thought at the very time when every crisis of the future fortune hangs on your decisions? A youth thoughtless! When all the happiness of his home forever depends on the chances or passions of an hour! when the career of all his days depends on the opportunity of a moment! when his every act is a foundation stone of future conduct, and every imagination a fountain of life or death! Be thoughtless in any after years rather than now.—Ruskin.

—An enlargement of the church building and a protracted meeting in July are among the plans of the church at Proctor, Texas, where C. C. Scittern is pastor.

—R. H. Fife and his singer, H. H. Saunders, having completed a successful meeting at Metropolis, Ill., begin at once a meeting at Durand, Mich., after a two days' visit with their families.

—Let the children's day offering be sent promptly to F. M. Rains, Secretary, Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio. Be careful to give the local name of the school when different from the post office.

—B. H. Sealock reports that the convention of the first district of Illinois, just held at Polo, was a most successful one. Great gains in all lines were reported. "The audiences were large, and the spirit fine, even when discussing federation." Why not?

—A. A. Honeywell, of Hiram, O., has been called to take up the work at McConnellsville, from which John Mullin, who has located at Delhart, Texas, resigned recently on account of poor health.

—The new church building at Ponca City, Okla., is complete and will be dedicated June 17, with George W. Muckley in charge. R. H. Love, the pastor, writes: "We now have one of the best modern church structures in northern Oklahoma."

—W. B. Harter, who recently took charge of the work at Lead, S. D., is planning for a meeting the last of this month. He says there is room for some hard work in Deadwood, Spearfish, Terry and other places which he hopes to look after as best he can.

—At Hickman and Rossville, Ky., although the churches were without ministers, some fifty additions were gleaned by the "Martin Family." A new Sunday-school organized at Hickman, and now the evangelists are engaged in a great meeting at Marion, Ky.

—F. A. Bright, who was formerly traveling a great deal as evangelist for western Pennsylvania, has just made a short trip to his old home in Bristolville, O.—the third time that he has been on a railroad since last December, when he took charge at Waynesburg.

—L. A. Hussong was recently at Norfolk, Neb., and the building site fund was so increased that property will be secured at once. He reports that the courage and sacrifices of the brethren there, who will file articles of incorporation as the Park Avenue Church of Christ, speak of a strong faith.

—R. A. Adams, of Copeland, Idaho, announces that he is now ready to enter the pastoral work, or to evangelize. He encloses a letter from Bro. D. A. Wickizer, commending him to the trust and confidence of the brotherhood, and as a strong man in the pulpit. Address him as above.

—J. F. Sloan has been supplying since the first of the year for our church at Rock Creek, O., but can now be had for Sunday supply in Ohio or Kansas before he returns to Los Angeles, Cal., in September, to take such work as opportunity may require. His address is 59 Knowles street, Cleveland, O.

—Colby D. Hall, one of our bright and good young preachers of Texas, has been chosen to act as educational secretary for that state and the southwest. Brother Hall will have to give up a promising pastorate at Hillsboro, but he enters upon the work with the conviction that it is second to none, and of vital importance.

—J. P. Lichtenberger has been asked to deliver an address on evangelism at the Buffalo convention. He has also been invited to preach for Dr. Kerr Boyce Tupper at the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York, on the subject, "Contribution of the Disciples to Religious Progress." This is one of a series of international sermons.

—A new church has just been organized with thirty-nine members at Lodington, La., by George W. Wise, of Leesville. We had no church there, but a few members. After a careful search some twenty-three were discovered, and sixteen others were added, fourteen by confession and baptism. Among the converts was the "Holiness preacher."

—O. P. Spiegel and J. E .Sturgis are in a meeting with M. F. Harmon at Jackson, Miss., where a second church has been organized with about forty members. Among those baptized was Brother Sturgis himself, he having been a member of the United Brethren Church. Brother Spiegel is to hold meetings in Texas from June 17 to August 5. One of them will be a camp meeting.

—Robert E. Henry, who has just been ordained to the ministry at West Point, Ill., by J. M. Elam, of Carthage, will take charge of the work at Moline, Ill., as the living link representative of the Carthage church. He is reported to be a young man of great promise.

—We hear good reports of the work at Council Bluffs, Ia., under W. B. Clemmer, where a fine meeting was recently held, an account of which appeared in our columns. We note that in a membership of 508 there are 111 men, 233 women and 164 young people.

—The church at Farmington, Mo., has more than doubled its apportionments in recent collections and has contributed to the National Benevolent Association. It has just completed a $2,000 parsonage and enjoyed a big rally and offering on Children's day. Edward Owers is the minister.

—B. B. Burton, University place, Des Moines, Ia., who has been pastor of several of our larger churches in the west and has been spending the last two years on the lecture platform, is available for evangelistic work. Here is an able and tried man, who ought to be kept busy every minute.

—The civic righteousness boom in Unionville, Mo., is bringing the churches into prominence. Our own congregation seems to be in the most healthful condition it has enjoyed for many months. The bi-county convention recently held there was the most enthusiastic and best attended one in its history.

—Edward L. Kirtley, of Polo, Okla., has made a success of his first year's ministerial work. C. F. Trimble, the living link evangelist, has just visited him and his bride, and reports that large audiences attend Brother Kirtley's ministrations, and that there have been 28 additions to the church, and all debt has been wiped out.

—The work at Nevada, Mo., under W. W. Burks, is in excellent condition. J. D. Dillard, who has recently visited it, says the Bible school is the best organized he has seen. The pastor is superintendent and he has two excellent assistants. R. R. Hamlin, of Texas, has been called to assist in a meeting next fall, and the machinery will be set in motion at once.

—The Frederick Avenue Christian Church, St. Joseph, Mo., is doing an excellent work. During the two months' ministry of William M. Thomas, 17 have been added at regular services, while every department has taken on new life. Seventeen hundred have been raised, and in a short time it is expected that a church will be erected on the new site recently purchased for that purpose.

—Since its organization, about 1,818 persons have been received into the Ninth Street Christian Church, Washington, D. C., of which E. B. Bagby is pastor. During the past six months the additions have numbered 80. The membership is engaged in a debt-clearing project, as well as one of soul-winning. They hope to clear off all incumbrances and burn their mortgage before the twentieth anniversary of the church.

For all ages, in all climates, under all conditions, Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed milk and Peerless Brand Evaporated-Cream fill every milk requirement. Superior for ice cream.

—A brother who has had ten or a dozen years' experience in the ministry and who has succeeded splendidly as state evangelist and state corresponding secretary, has been compelled to resign his place on account of health, another climate being necessary to keep him strong. Churches needing the services of a good man can be put into correspondence with this man by addressing W. J. Wright, Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—In sending us a remittance of one dollar for the Manchester, N. H., meeting, Bro. Stacy Pettit, of Los Angeles, Cal., says: "It is a small amount, but if there were a thousand like minded it could be done and no one feel it." We welcome these smaller contributions as well as the larger ones because those who contribute will be sure to pray for the success of the meeting.

—Geo. L. Snively, of The Christian-Evangelist, preached the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of Christian University at Canton, Mo., on June 3. Three of the nine members will at once enter upon the ministry of the Word. There are kindling hopes in the hearts of the faculty, curators and student body that this institution is just entering the era of its greatest usefulness.

—We have received a communication, through the clerk, from the church at Van Wert, O., speaking of the undivided regret of the brethren there at the loss of their late pastor, H. Minnick, and his wife, and commending them most heartily to the membership in their new field at Worcester, Mass. Brother Minnick has just closed his work at Van Wert, where there have been twenty-three accessions during his short ministry.

—"Can anything be done to protect the Baptist denomination from depraved men?" asks the "Standard" (Baptist), of Chicago. In that conundrum the Baptists will have the fellow feeling of all other religious bodies whose good name and reputation have suffered from men who have not the mind of Christ, but who seek their own things and their own selfish ends, rather than the peace and purity of the Church and the glory of God.

—We print this week the first part of Brother William Bayard Craig's address at our last congress. It will be concluded in our next issue. As there was some criticism of this speech we have thought it wise to give it in extenso. For ourselves, there is little in the speech that we can find fault with, but much to commend. It deals with principles, and had not, we believe, any personal application. If it had, some of its critics were not the ones to cast stones at its author.

—J. A. L. Romig, general evangelist and superintendent of missions of western Canada, urges ministers to send to him the names and addresses of any Disciples of Christ who are moving into the great northwest, that the missionary association there may get in touch with them and enlist them in the work of planting new churches throughout that district. A great work can be accomplished in this direction by hearty co-operation. Brother Romig may be addressed at Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, Canada.

—"Preached the memorial sermon here yesterday," or "I have been asked to deliver the high school baccalaureate." We have received a great many communications of this kind, but we really have not space to make these announcements. We are glad to know that our brethren are in such demand and that they are ready to make good use of every opportunity of this kind. Were we to publish all these items we would have a special page for this purpose, and we think we can use that page with matter that is more vital.

—C. R. Sine has surprised his congregation at Charlottesville, Va., by tendering his resignation, to take effect within three months. A good work has been accomplished by the church there under his ministrations. There have been more additions during the last year than have been recorded for a dozen years, with the exception of 1897 and 1898. The church debt has been decreased and more money raised for running expenses. Brother Sine, however, feels that he wants to get into the more progressive west. He has made no definite plans.

—In our advertising columns will be found reference to a book, entitled "The Greatest Work in the World: or The Mission of Christ's Disciples." This is written by Bro. C. B. Titus, who was for seven years a missionary in China under our Foreign Society. Brother Titus' book is an argument that God can be made known to men only through Christ. It will be found to be full of interesting facts, especially that part of it which is particuarly concerned with foreign mission work, which is really the bulk of the book. We may give a further notice of this in a future issue.

—The Young People's Society of Chris-ian Endeavor of the Central Christian hurch, Dallas, Texas, through its president, C. D. Browne, sends us a pledge of ve dollars towards the meeting in Man-hester, N. H., to be held by Bro. Herbert 'euell. Brother Browne says, "We wish his donation to be taken as an expres-ion of the high esteem in which Brother 'euell is held by our young people, as ve understand he is to be the evangel-st." We thank these young people for heir assistance in this worthy enterprise, nd we would that other Endeavor socie-ies may be stimulated by their example o do likewise.

—A business man, who knows the alue of a dollar, has given substantial vidence of his confidence in the Benevo-ent Association and his deep sympathy vith the Gospel of the Helping Hand. . C. Chapman, of Southern California, as sent the association $100 in the ame of his daughter, Ethel Chapman. Brother Chapman is a man of affairs, ut he does not forget the Lord's poor. n what more beautiful mission can we nterest our daughters? Let us en-ourage our children to aid their less ortunate sisters. Hundreds of others ould and should join our brother. Who vill be next?

—Information reaches us to the effect hat more people are now giving than ver before to the work of the First Christian Church at Shelby, O., and the mounts given are far beyond the past mounts in the aggregate. The Sunday-chool, under the leadership of C. E. Coburn, has about doubled in three nonths' time, and the offering grown rom 92 cents to $6.12. A gymnasium nd reading room has been fitted up and s showing its value. It is comfortable, vell lighted and heated. Not a penny of lebt was incurred for it. C. R. L. Vaw-er is the present pastor.

—W. G. Hearne, who has been but a ittle over a year in charge of our church t Eldorado Springs, Mo., has a very good report to make of the past thirteen months' vork. During this period the new building has been completed, and is modern in every way. A silver individual communion set was recently presented by the ladies' aid society. The membership has been on the increase, twenty-five having been added. Marcellus Ely and S. W. Crutcher held special meetings. The church raised for missions and benevolences about $56, and it is entirely out of debt, with all the organizations moving steadily forward.

—J. Fredwell Stone has resigned at Dixon, Ill., to take effect August 1, or earlier, if the church board is able to secure a satisfactory successor. The local paper says that the decision has met with the sincere regret not only of the members of the church, but of many outside friends, and assigns Brother Stone's reason as a desire to return to a southern field. During his two years' pastorate 274 members have been added to the church at Dixon, and the offerings have also been doubled. Our church there is now the second in point of size among the Protestant churches of the city. The local paper speaks very highly of Brother Stone's work, and says that he has good business, as well as preaching ability.

—L. G. Batman and his wife are very much beloved by the membership at the First Christian Church, Philadelphia, Pa. As a testimonial of the appreciation of their zealous services during the last three years the members of the official board, with their wives, have just given a banquet at the Hotel Majestic to the pastor and his wife. Dr. E. E. Montgomery presided and acted as toastmaster. The toasts were responded to by Samuel Troth, on "Our Guests;" W. T. C. Sanders, on "The Influence of the Old Twelfth Street Church upon the Present Work;" Dr. J. W. West on "Western Blood and Its Influence Upon Our Eastern Church Work;" Mrs. T. D. Ferguson, on "Woman's Work in the Church;" Dr. J. O. Arnold, on "My Travels with the Pastor," and Prof. V. B. Brecht on "The Sunday-school as the Nursery of the Church."

—M. L. Cottrell has removed from Hickory, Wis., to Seymour, in the same state. He reports it as a case of federation, he having been called as a Christian minister to take charge of a Congregational church. We gather from his communication that there are only a few members of our own brotherhood and a few Congregationalists in the town, with quite a number of people who want to hear simply the Gospel. This church expects to entertain the Wisconsin state convention this fall, and in the summer Brother Cottrell hopes to have an evangelist who will preach our plea. Of course, the Congregationalists, if they choose to act like some of our own brethren, ought to get very much excited, but we trust they will not be so foolish.

—Hon. G. N. Tillman has been preaching a lay sermon in the Vine Street Christian Church, of Nashville, on the subject of "Christian Faith and Modern Science." The sermon is printed in the local papers and seems to have made a strong impression. It is a good sermon, and we regret that our space forbids us to publish it. We quote only the closing paragraph:

"In conclusion, let me say that all of us are liable and do suffer more or less from moral malady which disorders our inward or spiritual being; few, if any, are or can be, in this world holy; and if there were no remedy or cure for our diseases, no way by which we could escape the consequences of our failures and our violations of God's laws, we could only contemplate the future world with terror and await in despair the final judgment. But the glorious faith of Christians is that if we sincerely repent of our sins and ever strive to amend our lives, fainting not in this effort, but continuing faithful to the end, keeping our faces and directing our steps heavenward, God is just to forgive us our sins through Christ our Lord, who hath redeemed us from the bondage of law, and translated us into the kingdom of love and mercy. 'Tis love that casteth out all fear, and if we have faith in the revelation of God's character as manifest in Christ we can not but love him, and that love will draw us ever upward, and our faith will grow stronger and stronger, and our hope brighter and brighter, and the blessedness and joy of the life to come will be but a continuation of the blessedness and joy of the life that is."

—The large advertisement which we publish elsewhere, entitled, "The Way to Freedom Found at Last," announces one of the most remarkable discoveries of recent times in the way of a remedy for a certain class of diseases which has long baffled medical skill. It is a cure for the morphine and whiskey habits, which promises to excel other advertised cures as far as the best of them excel ordinary medical treatment. The Editor of The Christian-Evangelist would hardly have credited the claim made for this remedy had he not personally visited Paris, Ill., and interviewed people who were once the victims of morphine, cocaine and whiskey, and were cured by it without any pain or the slightest inconvenience. If the merits of the "Shepherd Treatment" were known to the suffering the elegant hospital and sanitarium in Paris, devoted to the care of patients, would not hold a tithe of those applying for treatment. It is a new remedy, however, and this is the first effort to introduce it to the public at large. It was thought best to demonstrate its merits locally first. The discoverer is a member of the Christian Church in Paris and those associated with him are connected with the same body. Those of our readers who know of any persons who are suffering from those addictions would confer a great favor on the unfortunate victims by calling their attention to this remedy. Read the "ad" elsewhere.

—From personal observation we have long felt sure that those brethren who do not believe in co-operative work have been making very little progress compared with what might be expected from those who are so godly and are so sure that they have all the truth. At last some of them seem to realize that things are not, in their own Zion, as they ought to be, and while they are still of a mind to say (we quote from an editorial in "The Christian Leader") "Garrison, W. T. Moore and all their fellow-leaders are simply a set of traitors in the camp of the Lord of hosts," and charge us with being under the influence of Satan, and call us "infidels," that paper sees the necessity of a systematic campaign for the practical education and development of the churches which support it. It finds a lack of decency and order among these supersound brethren. "Because of this lack of attention to details houses become dilapidated, weeds and briars grow up, houses get dirty, song books are not provided, the sick and poor are not visited and cared for, mission work is not done, preaching is not properly supported, careless members are not saved, interested people are not fully taught." We are not surprised that "The Christian Leader" has occasion to ask, "Shall we give more attention to the details of our Lord's' work?" Men who have been busy for years in the fault-finding business and in accusing their brethren of being "under the influence of Satan" are not the kind of men whom even hardened sinners are anxious to take their instruction from. We really think that it is more than time for them to give attention to constructive work and to the preaching of the Gospel rather than to foolish criticism.

Herbert Yeuell's Success at Winston-Salem, N. C.

Our five weeks' meeting closed May 31, with 54 additions. During the last week we transferred it from the big warehouse to the church, and contrary to the expectation of many, the converts came also and properly identified themselves. While over 300 came forward, warehouse meeting style in these parts, we counted only those who actually united with the Christian Church. Our church has been counted so trifling in this staid old town that we consider this a great victory, especially so in the character of the converts. The present indebtedness will be paid August 1. Measures were adopted last night looking to a larger church in a better location, and one of the new converts gave as a thank offering $1,000 and promised to raise $500 additional. It was resolved also to secure a leading evangelist for another big meeting next year—this in the face of the cost of this one, which was over $600, all of which was easily raised during the meetings. There are some fine people here, and

TWO NEW BUILDINGS FOR THE CAUSE

First Christian Church at Jackson, Ky., the Feud Town.

Memorial Church, Hiram, Ohio.

Jackson, a thrifty Kentucky town, has acquired a national and unenviable reputation because of the violence committed there for a number of years. Yet Jackson has its scores of faithful Christian people and good reason for mention in our religious papers. A Christian Church was organized there by Brothers Rogers and Hopkins in 1902. A. K. Brooks was the first regular minister. Since September, 1904, W. J. Dodge has been with the church. The membership of fifty includes some who were previously members in the best churches in Central Kentucky, but who went to Jackson because of the excellent business opportunities the place affords. Fifteen have been added to the membership at the regular meetings in the last year. The congregation is hopeful and the outlook encouraging. Through the untiring labors of the faithful minister of their church, money has been raised and a new and neat stone church was ready for use May 15. On June 17 dedication services will be held by A. E. Cory, of China. He will remain for a protracted meeting immediately following the dedication. His success as an evangelist will greatly help the church.

For the convenience of those who wish to attend the formal dedication a special train will be run from Lexington. The round trip will cost $2 and tickets will be issued only for those who go to the dedication service. It will be an excellent thing for Christian brethren to give this needy congregation every encouragement. Attend this service; help the Master's work by a liberal contribution toward making up the sum needed to free the new house from work-hindering debt. The secular press can then chronicle something more to the credit of Kentucky manhood.—B. C. Deweese, College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky.

The new Hiram Memorial Church was dedicated to the worship and service of God on May 27, the ninth anniversary of the burning of the old church. The beautiful structure, with furnishing, has cost nearly $18,000. About one-third of that amount has been contributed by alumni and other friends outside of Hiram. More than 300 contributors are represented. The offerings have come from a score of states and from missionaries on the foreign field. Some have been large and generous gifts. Some have been small, yet generous, gifts. Less than $4,000 remains to be paid on the building and that is practically provided for by outstanding subscriptions. Through the kindness of Mr. Carnegie and Bro. Abram Teachout, of Cleveland, an organ is also provided for and will be placed in the church at an early day. In behalf of the Hiram Church and community, who have themselves done heroically, I wish to express to one and all our friends our earnest appreciation of their aid.—B. S. Dean.

A Harbinger of Union.

The Bible drills of the "Tenth Legion" and "Dorotheans" of the Hamilton Avenue Church of St. Louis, under the leadership of Hon. J. F. Merriman, a Bethany alumnus, are events that always tax the standing as well as the seating capacity of the church. The program last Friday night included stereopticon illustrations of the quarter's Bible lessons accompanied by recitations and expositions of the texts revealing remarkable proficiency in the Scriptures. An address, "Why We Believe," by Willie Wheeler, would have done a college senior credit. The debate,

> Resolved, That it is not permitted unto woman to speak in the church, and that the occupying of the pulpit by the officers of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and by the women prominently connected with the Bible school is unscriptural and should receive the censure of the elders, was ably argued but, of course, unanimously decided in favor of the negative. During the debate one young orator warmly commended the Editor of this paper for insisting on carrying out the scriptural formula to the letter in administering the ordinance of holy communion at the St. Louis national convention of our churches.

Among the features of more general interest were expressions from some of the visiting denominational ministers. The German Evangelical pastor said, "Christian union is in the air. While in our day that organic union many of us have been expecting may not come, yet there is evidenced here to-night a union of heart and purpose more precious than any mere exterior form of union that may not be of the life." A young Baptist pastor was introduced as "one of our first cousins." He said for reasons well known to Brother Merriman he had a right to be called our grandfather. He plead with the great audience for a living illustration of the unity already existing among God's people in an effort to overthrow the iniquities of this great city and to enthrone righteousness.

A Presbyterian pastor remarked: "You Christians believe in Christian union, but we Presbyterians practice it. Presbyterianism has just illustrated how the divergent hosts of the Lord may be mobilized into one united army. We believe this is but a prophecy of the complete union that will soon be effected. Whether this united church be called Presbyterian, by the more comprehensive name of Catholic, or simply the Christian church, is a matter of indifference to me so the union for which our Savior prayed is accomplished." Of course these union sentiments were gratifying and fervently applauded. It is needless to say some of our own people not closely reading this paper were somewhat surprised to learn how earnestly the denominations are looking forward to and working for Christian union.

No professional triumph could have been more gratifying to Brother Merriman than was the success of that night's Bible drill. No happier man was in St. Louis than Robert Stockton, who largely built the church and made possible such a large Christian assembly. The Lord give us more such lawyers and business men.

Iowa Convention.

The Iowa Christian convention will be held in Iowa City, June 25-28. A splendid program has been prepared, and the "Athens" of Iowa throws open its doors. All who expect to attend are requested to send their names to the undersigned. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished those who respond. Percy Leach.

Foreign Society Receipts.

The receipts of the Foreign Society to June 1, or for the first eight months of the missionary year, amounted to $128,443, a loss of $45,750. The receipts for May amounted to $17,872, a gain of $2,810. The chief loss is in annuities, which amount to about $11,000. There is a gain in all the regular receipts.

The South Kentucky Convention

The thirty-second annual meeting of the South Kentucky Missionary and Bible School Association, together with the eighteenth annual meeting of the C. W. B. M., has just been held at Murray, Ky. The reception given by the Murray church, its pastor, Brother Stoney, and its friends in the community, was all we could wish. Their splendid new building added much to our enjoyment and is a credit to a loyal people. The attendance was the largest for years, and this week the reports of the past year's work and the policy outlined for the coming year filled the hearts of all with abounding enthusiasm.

The program, from the opening session of the C. W. B. M. to the close of the convention on Thursday, was full of good things. I wish I might speak of each address, but space forbids. Suffice to say they dealt with vital phases of the work before us and stirred the hearts of those who heard them.

The sessions of the C. W. B. M. section were presided over by Mrs. Elizabeth Fish Seargent, who was also selected as president for another year. The reports showed the work in a healthy and hopeful condition. A notable forward movement was suggested by the president and will be undertaken the coming year. It is that the South Kentucky auxiliaries support a living link. The presence of Mrs. Sarah K. Yancey was a great inspiration to the convention.

Owing to urgent business, Dr. J. W. Crenshaw, president of the missionary convention, was prevented from attending. In his absence Roger L. Clark, of Mayfield, presided and also delivered the convention sermon, to the delight of all. The reports of the corresponding secretary and treasurer, W. J. Hudspeth, and of the Bible school evangelist, R. M. Hopkins, were a revelation, and created great enthusiasm. That of the corresponding secretary showed $2,500 raised, all bills paid and $550 in treasury. A number of new churches were organized and a large number of additions were reported. The work is in the best condition for years and Brother Hudspeth was rightly dubbed "Gen. Hudspeth." Brother Hopkins' report showed the wisdom of combining our Bible school work with that of the Central Kentucky association. Sixteen of the 33 counties were visited, institutes held and a general acquaintance with the work obtained. The committee on future work aroused our enthusiasm to a high pitch when it sounded as a watchword for the coming year, "Four Thousand Dollars for South Kentucky Work!"

The visiting speakers brought with them great addresses and spoke them with power. "Foreign Missions" Rains electrified us, while George B. Renshaw was not a whit behind in his plea for home missions. Others were J. W. Graham, "The Old Woman in a Shoe" who plead for the orphans; W. T. Donaldson, A. M. (After Money), told us of the Bible College, and D. F. Stafford, F. D. (Fraternal Delegate), brought greetings from Central Kentucky and invited us to Louisville.

The most tender hour of the convention was that when the report of the committee on obituaries was read by Harry D. Smith, of Hopkinsville. This was made especially touching as the name of Bro. J. W. Gant was among those who had passed over the river. Brother Gant was identified with this work for a quarter of a century. His consecrated energies, untiring efforts and sympathetic counsel had ever been an inspiration and drew very closely to him all who knew him. His memory is sacred to all. The officers for the coming year are: President, Dr. J. W. Crenshaw, of Cadiz; first vice president, T. T. Roberts, of Morganfield; second vice president, Howard J. Brazelton, of Earlington; recording secretary, W. G. Eldred, of Princeton. W. J. Hudspeth was retained as corresponding secretary and treasurer and Robert M. Hopkins as Bible school evangelist. Our confidence in these two men leads us to hope for large things another year. Steps were taken to revive the summer school, which was held for a number of years, and to hold in connection with this a conference for Bible school workers. This is a good move and meets with hearty approval. The convention goes to Morganfield next year. Roger L. Clark, Mayfield, was selected as fraternal delegate to the Central Kentucky convention.

judging by the churches that I visited, is fervent and sincere, and for the most part intelligent. Most of them read the Bible readily, and carry it with them to the house of God. Their responsive readings would have done credit to any of our American churches. while the readiness with which they turned to every passage of Scripture announced showed their familiarity with the books that compose the Bible. In prayer they reverently bow the head, and all join in an audible "amen" at the close. Their singing is hearty, and their voices generally musical. The silence during the Lord's supper is profound, and the attention with which they hear the word of God would indicate both the intelligence necessary for its understanding and the spiritual capacity to profit by it. Many of them are faithful in bringing their weekly or monthly offerings for the support of the Lord's work, and few are utterly indifferent to this obligation. Some, out of their deep poverty, abound in the riches of their liberality.

The one most serious problem before the missionary in Jamaica is that of the sexual immorality that abounds among the people, and the lack of any high ideal of the home and family life. Very many men and women are rearing families out of wedlock, and it is said that over 60 per cent of the children of Jamaica are of illegitimate birth. The causes for this sad condition are several. The homes of the people are often huts of bamboo and mud, roofed with thatch, and with but one room. Here parents and children are herded together so as to make real privacy, or even decency, practically impossible. The dress of the girls and women, their life in the fields and forest, their long journeys on foot to the distant markets, often causing them to sleep by the roadside under the open sky, added to the natural lack of modesty that characterizes the race, lends encouragement to the formation of evil habits. But the missionaries are grappling with this problem most nobly, and slowly but surely higher ideals are replacing the lower, marriage is taking the place of concubinage, homes are being better built and more comfortably furnished and a general improvement in the daily habits of the people is observable. The example of Christian family life afforded to the natives by the missionaries and their households is a powerful agency for the elevation of the whole island.

The future of Jamaica can not be in doubt with those who believe in the power of God, the Gospel and the purpose of divine grace which is revealed in the Scriptures. This lovely island, set like a gem in the bosom of the Carribean Sea, shall yet shine with the luster of moral renewal and spiritual regeneration. Its people shall yet adorn their Redeemer's brow with the crown of their pure and consecrated lives. In this high enterprise and accomplishment the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will have borne no little part.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

A Good Work in Iowa.

Valley Junction, a most enterprising suburb of Des Moines, just outside the city limits, became important a few years ago by the location of extensive shops and the division point of the Rock Island Railroad. The Des Moines City Mission Board at once took possession and built a small chapel before we had a dozen members in the place. It now has probably 2,500 people, with all modern appointments and "hustle," but not much religious "hustle." Our mission has had a strenuous experience and some trouble. Nearly five years ago L. F. McCray took charge, with about 30 members, in serious trouble, and a house so small that growth was impossible. He and his equally capable and devoted wife have labored and sacrificed as very few are willing to do. With a vision far ahead and almost no encouragement, he planned a house which would be very creditable in the city itself, and by dint of enormous exertion at the State Fair eating house and otherwise has gotten the undertaking well in hand and is now completing the enlargement and transformation of the old building into a church apartment and institutional house, with all modern appointments, including baths, hospital, club and reading rooms, etc., which will make the entire church property worth $20,000. With the assistance of Evangelist C. G. Stout and their regular music director, Miss Blanche Furman, of the Drake Conservatory of Music, they recently closed a 32 days' meeting, the best we have ever had in the place, with 84 accessions, 70 of them by confession and 30 from half a dozen other churches, furnishing another illustration of the fact that we occupy the only ground on which a union of God's people is possible. We now have 160 members, a Sunday-school of 120 and other auxiliaries to correspond, and more inspiration and hopefulness in the membership than ever before.—S. C. Slayton.

Denver.

I find on my return to Denver everything in the churches in good condition. William Ross Lloyd supplied during my absence the South Broadway Church pulpit. Fifteen persons united with the congregation. Seven of this number confessed Christ. Brother Lloyd did good work. He is spoken of as an exceptionally good teacher of the Bible and as an unusually able preacher of the Word. At present Brother Lloyd is preaching in Salt Lake City. During my absence the Highlands Church, J. E. Pickett, pastor, dedicated its new house of worship. The building of this house under existing conditions is an achievement worthy of special mention. Brother Pickett is doing a fine work in a quiet way. He has no trumpet, or if he owns such an instrument he does not use it.——Leon S. Dudley, a member of the South Broadway Church, has been called to preach for the congregation at Manzanola, Colo. From the Manzanolo "Sun" I learn that Brother Dudley has produced a most favorable impression on both the church and the community. Leon S. Dudley is A No. 1.——T. T. Thompson has left the East Side Church and is on a farm in the neighborhood of Des Moines, Ia. He gave up his work in Denver on account of the seriously impaired condition of his health. If it is possible for a man to be too good Theodore Theophilus Thompson belongs to that class. His devotion to his work in Denver during the last five and a half years and his unselfishness have excited the admiration of all who are acquainted with him.——The work in the Berkeley Church is in a healthy condition under the gracious and wise leadership of Flournoy Payne. One of our South Broadway "associate" members went to Berkeley some months ago to reside. She at once interested herself in the work of the congregation, making herself actively useful and has just been baptized by Brother Payne in the South Broadway Church. This is what we do with our "associate" members.——The Central Church, the mother of us all, William Bayard Craig, pastor, recently held its annual meeting. Dr. Craig says: "It was the happiest and cheeriest meeting of the present pastorate." The reports that were read showed every department of the church to be in splendid condition. The receipts from all sources during the year were $5,858.43, more than $500 in excess of the receipts last year. One hundred and forty-two persons united with the church—41 by baptism. The total enrollment is 610, of whom 35 are nonresident; about 500 are residents of Denver and are active in the work of the church. There was a gain of 28 in the membership of the Endeavor Society during the year, the contribution of the young people to the work of missions was $123.98. I am informed that "for the first time in many years the dear old Central is conducting business on a generous scale and paying all bills as they fall due." To jot down these, merely sample, facts affords me inexpressible pleasure.—B. B. Tyler.

Southern California.

This is to go down in history as the year of church building in our section. Already since our last convention buildings have been completed at Highland Park, El Monte, Monrovia, San Bernardino, Magnolia Mission and Pico Heights. While nearing completion and standing in line like Saturday patrons of a barber shop, ready for Dedicator Chapman's "next," are Boyle Heights, Main Street, Los Angeles, Santa Maria and East Eighth Street. And looking further down the line one sees in prospect Ocean Park, Holtville, Rialto, Pasadena, Santa Ana, San Diego, not to mention others yet in the "windy" stage of building. Of these 16 places, 11 are mission fields, and for the most part are our first homes in new fields.——A. C. Chowning has located with the church at Escondido.——H. E. Wilhite has resigned at San Bernardino to enter the evangelistic field and Sumner T. Martin succeeds him in the pastorate.——F. M. Dowling has returned to his work at Pasadena. This strong church is to build a $40,000 edifice this summer.——C. C. Bentley, until recently of Hanford, is supplying the pulpit at Pomona until M. A. Hart, of Springfield, Mo., enters upon his pastorate there. Brother Bentley expects to remain in Southern California.——S. W. Jackson, after a splendid year's work at Douglas, Ariz., has taken work as evangelist in Western Texas.——J. I. Myers has completed a splendid work as pastor at Downey. He now serves the church at Highland Park, Los Angeles.——A. C. Smither and the First Church, Los Angeles, entered with zest into the Sunday-school revival for April, and the result shows 89 additions to the church at the regular services of three Lord's days.——Charles Reign Scoville, with Percy Kendall and wife, are in a meeting with H. E. Wilhite and the San Bernardino Church. Great results are expected. After this comes the meeting at Long Beach.——J. D. Hart has resigned at Oxnard and expects to go into business somewhere.——We need preachers at Corona, Oxnard, Ontario, Downey, Rialto, Colton and Santa Monica. These fields can pay from $500 to $900 a year. Only good, efficient pastors need concern themselves about it. The secretary solicits correspondence.——The simultaneous revival committee for Southern California has organized for business. It is expected that revivals will be held at the same time in at least 40 churches. The date set for beginning is April 20, 1907, or as soon thereafter as possible. A. C. Smither is chairman of this committee and Grant K. Lewis secretary. Sub-committees on evangelists, finance and publicity are being former. Each church is co-operating and has one representative on the general committee. Let all the churches get in line at once.——Plans for the annual convention are a-making. It will be held at Long Beach, August 9-19. The usual sessions of the Ministerial Association, the state and general missionary interests, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor activities will be represented on the program. Prof. Herbert L. Willett, of Chicago, Ill., will be chief lecturer and the splendid new Auditorium at Long Beach has been secured for the sessions.—Grant K. Lewis, Secretary.

Pasadena, Cal.

One year ago I came to Pasadena, Cal., to hold a meeting. I was called to become acting pastor pending the vacation of the regular pastor, Frank M. Dowling, on account of illness. During the year I have held meetings at Santa Ana, Napa and South Pasadena, 243 persons have united with the church, 86 of them by confession and baptism. Every department of the church has grown. Here is a grand total of $10,000 raised for the year—a noble showing from a people without a single rich man among them. The church now has a membership of 639 united, active, hopeful people as they enter upon another term of service with Brother Dowling as pastor, who is to lead them this year in the building of a beautiful new church at Marengo avenue. Brother Dowling's expected return, with health largely restored, enables me to resign here and accept another field. This I have done, and expect to take up the work in San Bernardino, at the close of Chas. Reign Scoville's great meeting, about June 1. My year and a half of service in California has been delightful to me beyond expression. Almost 600 persons have united with the churches where I preached, and my stay in this beautiful, sunny summer-land has made me fall in love with California; and Pasadena is the finest city of all this beautiful country.—Sumner T. Martin.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. ## Illinois.

The church at Cairo has about $5,000 pledged on a new house of worship which they expect to erect this summer on the well located lot on which the present house stands. They expect their building to cost about $10,000 or $12,000. Having no regular minister, their work moves slowly. The Sunday-school prospers, and one young man made the good confession the day I was there.

A small audience met at Christian chapel to hear about Christian Education. The church is near Pulaski, was organized by Brother I. A. J. Parker, of Vienna, who preaches for the church once a month. It has a fine class of young people, some of whom we hope to have in Eureka College soon.

The Toledo church, near Cobden, is one of the good, old fashioned country churches. Bro. C. S. Towne, venerable in years, is the leading elder of the church. In this church I. J. Holloman, our minister at Anna, was raised. There are some splendid people in this church and community, who, with aggressive evangelistic and pastoral work, would grow into a great church.

Bro. D. A. Hunter has done a splendid work for the Herrin church, but expects to change fields soon. This is the home of Miss Della Ostine, who so worthily serves as district secretary of the C. W. B. M. This church is considering a new house, and has a fine field of operations.

A new house also is in prospect at Carterville, where our faithful F. L. Davis so ably preaches the Gospel. He was formerly a Eureka student. They had observed Education Day, and I was not surprised to find a good interest among a fine class of young people in Christian education. The church prospers in all its departments.

Elkville has been without a preacher since Bro. E. W. Sears moved to Vienna, months ago. They have a good house for the place, and the good membership, including the leading people of the community, will make a strong force, under the leadership of a good minister, for large and useful service for the Master.

At Mulkeytown J. F. Grissom is just finishing his first year's ministry. The church numbers more than three hundred, with a good Sunday-school and a prayermeeting, mostly by the young people, of more than 100. This is one of the royal churches that, through the fidelity of its minister, largely, observed Education Day. Few ministers have done more for his young people than has Brother Grissom. He is a very useful young man, and if he does not remain here he will not long remain idle.

At Centralia J. F. Rosborough is hard at work, and the rapid development of the church in all departments shows that he is a master workman. The Christian Endeavor Society is full of life, the Sunday-school numbers about 200, and the house was crowded at the evening services. I have not often addressed a more attentive people on the subject of Christian Education.. At the close of the services two persons made the good confession. A new house of worship is now in the minds of the people.

After a little more than two months' absence from the familiar faces and places of Eureka, the best part of the trip was realized—the homecoming. "No place like home," although but two rented rooms, but we look forward to enlargement in some way or another. Only a few short days at home, and out again in the Master's service.

At Canton J. C. Lappin is enlarging his field. All departments are growing. The Sunday-school enrolls nearly 300; the C. W. B. M. is full of life and genuine missionary spirit. Sister Lappin is proving herself a most worthy and efficient helpmeet.

Brother Charles Hill, recently moved from Eureka to Clinton, and visits and preaches for the church at Cuba every week. This is one of our good old churches that is in sympathy with all our public enterprises, and the preacher that does not instruct the people and take all the offerings is not considered well up in his work. Guess the church is right. It is not likely that all in any church will soon give to any one cause, but there is no unworthy work among us, and there are some in every church that will want to give, so keep the doors wide open. Many Disciples can do but little, except with their money, and he has a right to the opportunity that he believes will mean the most.

The little church at Youngstown is another substantial body of earnest, ready-hearted people. It has a membership of about 75 and a Sunday-school enrollment of 50. Fred Nichols, from Eureka College, preaches for the church half time. The community is dependent upon our supply of Gospel truth.

At Roseville C. R. Wolford is doing fine work. He was educated at Hiram, O., but has early adopted Illinois as his field of labor, and is becoming acclimated much more rapidly than many do who come from other states. It is a great loss of time and energy for a preacher to take three or four years to begin to take interest in, and to begin work on the great enterprises of his adopted state. We do not expect our Illinois preachers, when they move into other states, to plead with their brethren to support Illinois missions and Eureka College, but have we not the right to expect every preacher in our state to be loyal to the great enterprises in the state, and work for them, when he comes and while he stays? Roseville has all the usual auxiliaries of church usefulness, and is doing splendid work. Like many churches, however, its giant strength has not touched the limit of its power.

The Raritan church is taking a rest.

The Old Bedford Church for more than 50 years has been a center of moral and spiritual strength. From it went the nucleus for the churches at Stronghurst, Raritan, Blandinsville, La Harpe and others, as well as sending many members to other sections of the country. Doubtless more members sleep in their graves than are on the present roll. H. S. Mavity has been their faithful and efficient minister since January last. The audiences are large and there are additions almost every week. Every department of the work is prospering, and the people are happy. The service of the Lord is full of pleasure, and they who sacrifice for him have a present and lasting reward.—J. G. Waggoner, Eureka, Ill.

Greater New York and Vicinity.

The simultaneous revival in the churches of Greater New York and New Jersey proved a success. Evangelistic meetings, continuing from two to five weeks, were held in six of our eight churches and missions, resulting in 315 additions. Between March 1 and May 1, fifty-one were added at regular services, making a total of 366 for the two months. Of these about 340 will be enrolled in the churches, increasing their membership 23 per cent. This is the more remarkable when we consider that the First Church, Manhattan, and the Third Church, Brooklyn, representing one-fourth of our strength, were not enlisted in the campaign, the former being without a minister and the latter having had a successful meeting in the fall, in which twenty-six were added. A large part of this splendid result is, of course, due to the Scoville meeting at Lenox Avenue, a report of which has already appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Two impossible things were proven possible in this meeting. First, it is possible to get a hearing in New York City. Second, men and women of New York City will respond to the old message, plainly, kindly and insistently preached. Yet even this prince among evangelists would have been powerless except for the great faith and untiring devotion of the pastor, J. P. Lichtenberger, his assistant, Mrs. McCorkle, and the entire Lenox Avenue Church.

At One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street A. E. Cory, their living link missionary now on furlough, preached for four weeks preceding Easter. W. E. M. Hackleman, assisted as chorus director and soloist. They, too, astonished their neighbors and themselves by crowding their auditorium, arousing the community and adding forty-four to the church, forty-three of them upon confession of faith. Furthermore, their building fund has grown so rapidly during the past sixty days that they will complete their house this summer. This promises to be far the greatest year in the long devoted ministry of Brother Willis at One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street.

the minister at Green Point, Brooklyn, in a three-weeks' meeting, with thirty-five additions. We believe this is the most successful campaign yet waged by the brethren at Humboldt Street. Counting six recently received at regular services, they now number 245 members.

At Sterling Place, Brooklyn, two weeks were given to evangelistic meetings, neighboring pastors preaching the first week and Brother Harlan the second. Ten were received during the meetings and ten others at regular services during March and April. East Orange, N. J., followed the same plan. Brother Bates reports fourteen during the meeting and twenty-three others since March 1, making the present membership 140. Incidentally the church raised nearly $300 more than enough to make the final payment of $964 on their church property and celebrated by burning their mortgage May 11. Their house is already outgrown and a building committee is considering plans for a new church.

Plainfield, N. J., is a struggling mission of forty members, under a courageous leader, Phil. A. Parsons. Brethren Spiegel and Sturgis assisted him in a four weeks' meeting, with four additions. This field has proven strangely irresponsive to all evangelistic efforts, of other religious bodies as well as our own. Some day there will be an awakening in Plainfield. The First Church at Fifty-sixth street has recently received five into its membership. After a trying year without a pastor, they have extended a unanimous call to M. L. Bates, of East Orange. It is understood that he will accept as soon as the right man is found to succeed him in his present important field. Brother Bates understands the difficulties of a city church and the problems at Fifty-sixth street in particular. The church is getting in shape to give him the united support, without which any man is helpless, and every one is expecting a safe construction work worthy of the best traditions of this historic church, now nearing its centennial. Brother Bates will continue his special graduate study.

The youngest of our churches, Flatbush, Brooklyn, known as the Third Church, is also looking for another leader. The resignation of Bro. W. G. Oram, which has been before the Evangelistic Board of the Disciples' Union for two months, was reluctantly accepted at their meeting, May 8. Brother Oram has performed a difficult task well in the two years and a half he has been in Flatbush. A united church of sixty-two members, comfortably housed in a rapidly building residence section of Brooklyn, is the result. He is beloved by all our pastors and churches of Greater New York, as well as by his own people. The Home and State Boards, together with the Disciples' Union of New York, will continue to assist in the maintenance of a minister in this promising mission. The Disciples' Union of Greater New York and vicinity met in the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street Church May 8. Brothers Ranshaw and Wright, of the Home Board, gave us strong addresses. While we mused what these things should mean, Brother Willis proposed that the union ask the co-operation of the Home, State and Extension Boards in planting another church in Bronx Borough. The trustees of the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street Church are ready to give or lend their mission chapel, worth $2,500. The expense of moving it to one of the newer and unchurched neighborhoods would be small. Strong support for four or five years ought to plant another self-supporting church in that most rapidly growing section of New York City. The suggestion met with the hearty approval of the union and was adopted by definite action of the executive committee before leaving the room. Important history was written that night. The union elected as its officers for the ensuing year: President, Miner Lee Bates; vice president, M. E. Harlan; secretary, F. H. Johns; treasurer, George W. Kramer; executive committee, F. M. Applegate, P. F. Jerome, R. C. McWayne, J. T. Ransom, A. S. Vance, Joseph Keevill and J. A. Williamson.

Kansas.

The writer dedicated the new building at Rexford, on May 6. It is a neat frame building, costing $844. The membership consists of three persons, a man and two women. Two of the members moved away, so one person, Mrs. Ida F. Loomis, with the assistance of her husband, who acted as building committee, raised the money and built the house. It was all paid for on dedication day, including good pledges, save $150. This was to be raised during a meeting which N. A. Stull is conducting. Here is heroism.——The enlarged building at Marion I dedicated on May 13. It is one of the best in the town. W. M. Berkeley, pastor, is making good success. Over $800 were raised dedication day, which pays all bills and procures pews for the building. All the churches in the city attended at the evening service, and the house was packed. The Marion brethren are waking up. They have a future, and are determined to seize the opportunity. Brother Berkeley and his wife are justly proud of the good work accomplished, as is also the entire church.——E. N. Phillips is at Turon, a new field. His meeting at Glasgow resulted in adding 29 to the membership, 15 by confession and baptism, and in placing the plea before the community as never before. Many persons of wealth were among the accessions. The church will employ a preacher for full time.——J. M. Lowe, our state evangelist, began a meeting at Tonganoxie, but was compelled to postpone it after four days on account of becoming ill with typhoid fever. He is still very sick, but will doubtless recover, and take up his work again as evangelist.——N. A. Stull organized a new congregation of 85 members at Hoxie, and started a building fund. They will build at once. They have preaching half time by E. H. Dolbeare.——L. M. Wiles, formerly of Newton, takes the work at Burlington. He is a splendid man, and has a model preacher's wife. ——Now is the time for all delinquent churches to remember Kansas missions with a liberal offering. Our year closes June 30.—W. S. Lowe.

Western Pennsylvania.

The semi-annual convention of Western Pennsylvania has just closed in Connellsville. The attendance was splendid and the program of the first class throughout. E. A. Cole's paper on "Sabbatarianism," O. H. Phillips' convention sermon on "If Ye Had Faith as a Grain of Mustard Seed," and J. G. Slayter's appeal for the observance of "Boys' and Girls' Rally Day" were particularly worthy of mention. A special train on the Lake Erie was necessary to carry the Pittsburg delegation. C. M. Watson and his noble church deserve much credit for the most excellent entertainment; everything possible was done for the convenience and pleasure of the guests.——The Allegheny Church, under Bro. Wallace Tharp, cleared off a long standing debt of $1,800 last month.—Crafton, under the leadership of Walter S. Rounds, has broken ground for their new building. Their pastor is just recovering from a long siege of typhoid.——E. A. Hibler, for many years the pastor in Johnstown, is almost ready to dedicate the new building there. It is said to be the best among our people in Pennsylvania.——Charles H. Frick, who graduates in Hiram this year, has been called as the evangelist of Western Pennsylvania work, to begin July 1. ——J. A. Joyce, corresponding secretary W. P. C. M. S., has opened an office in the Bissell block, Pittsburg. He is to have personal supervision of several new points, which are to be fostered by the Western Pennsylvania board. Clairton and Ambridge, under his direction, will be organized soon. He has just established a most prominent and promising work in Ridgeway, where a pastor has been called.——Garry L. Cook, of Hiram, has recently located at Monongahela and is making things go up there.——Dravosburg, under the new pastor, T. M. Pitman, has visions of a brilliant future.——We are very gratified for the recovery of our venerable Western Pennsylvania president, R. S. Lattimer. After a protracted and serious illness he is again on duty and his genial countenance was the life of the Connellsville convention. ——I can not account for W. R. Warren, of the whole brotherhood (centennial secretary). It would take two stenographers to keep tab on him. His large office in the city is a veritable hive of industry, and if earnestness, enterprise and everlasting work will stir up our people on the centennial celebration idea they are going to be stirred. Des Moines, Ia., St. Louis, Indianapolis, Youngstown, Wheeling, Uhrichsville, Steubenville, Liverpool and Bethany were on his recent itinerary.——Thorp, Slayter, Manley, Gordon and I enjoyed two days trout fishing in the mountain streams of the Alleghenies recently. I won't mention the catch; it might be taken for a fish story.—L. N. D. Wells.

North Carolina.

Our meeting began April 29. I will make a report when we close. Our state evangelist, W. G. Walker, has been about three weeks in a meeting in Durham. It is pioneer work.——J. Boyd Jones, our corresponding secretary, held two meetings recently. He dedicated a house of worship at Aurora and preached, and reports 13 added. The other was at Ayden, where his brother, R. H. Jones, ministers. About 40 were added there.——Dr. B. T. Bitting, the faithful servant of the church at Spray, reports 213 at Sunday-school recently and a branch school just organized at North Spray. ——We are in what is called the Piedmont district in this state, and the co-operation meeting was held April 27-29, at Stokesdale. It was considered the most successful meeting held in this district. Seventeen churches and three missions reported. Two congregations did not report. Preachers present were T. J. Glenn, Stoneville; O. J. Helsabeck, Rural Hall; J. A. Spencer, Martinsville, Va.; Dr. B. T. Bitting, Spray, and J. W. Wolff. Rural Hall is a business man and preacher. Dr. Bitting is a successful physician and minister, and Bro. O. J. Helsabeck preached at nine or ten points. Brethren can see how we need more of such faithful preachers in our section of North Carolina. I am pleased to say that ten places contributed to missionary work of one or more boards. Corinth, where O. J. Helsabeck preaches once a month, doubled her apportionment for foreign missions. We need an evangelist in this district. ——O. J. Helsabeck and J. W. Wolff, of Rural Hall, T. J. Glenn, of Stoneville, and B. T. Bitting, of Spray, have visited us during our meeting, led by Yeuell and the Saxtons.——Commencement week at Atlantic Christian College at Wilson, N. C., began May 13.—J. A. Hopkins, Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

Iowa.

All arrangements for the Iowa Christian convention, to be held at Iowa, June 25-27, are complete. The program is ready. The church at Iowa City has the work of preparation well in hand. Committees are apointed and at work. Delegates will be furnished lodging and breakfast free. Dinner and supper will be served at 25 cents per meal. We are assured a one and one-third fare on the certificate plan for our railroad transportation. It has been 18 years since the convention met at Iowa City, and we ought to show our growth by going there in large numbers this year. Many of the churches and preachers are sending in their I. C. C. offerings that have for some cause or other been delayed. It is our most earnest desire that every preacher in the state will be enrolled as a contributor to Iowa missions before the convention is called.——New churches are being erected at Lohrville, Greenfield, Ottumwa and several buildings are being remodeled.——Your secretary dedicated the enlarged and remodeled church at Cuba on May 27. The Clearfield church will be dedicated the first of June, with I. N. McCash as master of ceremonies. Your secretary is invited to attend and assist in the services.——J. T. Shreve closes a most successful pastorate at Oelwein to take up the work at Memphis, Mo. We are sorry to have Brother Shreve leave the state.——H. A. Pallister has resigned his pastorate at Delta and will be ready for a new field July 1. Brother Pallister is one of the best preachers we have in the state, and is passionately devoted to the cause of Christ.——Charles Edward Wells, late of Keota, is another one of our good preachers that is available for a pastorate. A letter addressed to him at Eldora or University place, Des Moines, Ia., will reach him. We have a number of good fields that are pastorless, but not able to pay over $600 or $700 salary. Most of them are places that will develop rapidly under good leadership, and will soon take care of a preacher and his family. We need a few capable young men who can fit into just such places.—B. S. Denny, Cor. Sec., Des Moines, Ia.

A FORTUNE IN EGGS.

I get so many letters from my old home about preserving eggs that I will answer them through your paper. I started in 1888 with $36, bought eggs at 8c to 10c in summer, preserved them and sold in winter at from 25c to 36c per dozen. I preserved eggs 12 years and made $30,000. My niece started in 1894 with $10 which she reinvested each year with the profits and now she has $16,346 all made from $10 reinvested for eight years. You can buy eggs from 8c to 10c and sell them from 25c to 30c. Figure the profits yourself. To preserve them costs a cent a dozen. Any person can get desired information by addressing George E. ### SUPERIORITY OF SECRET OVER PUBLIC SERVICE.—Matt. 6:1-6.

To give or do in secret and long for it to be published is reprehensible; while to nobly give or do in the open but sincerely desiring it were known only to yourself and God is most commendable.

Our public actions are judged by their secret intentions, and our secret proceedings are as done in the light: The fatal duplicity of Ananias and Sapphira known in heaven, Acts 5:1-11. Achan's crime was before infallible witnesses, Josh. 7:1-26. Elijah's temporary infidelity under the juniper was known, 1 Ki. 19:4-8. Judas' treason was no surprise, Compare Lu. 22:47, 48 with Matt. 26:48. Angels knew of Messiah's lonely trials, Matt. 4:1-11. The trail of the shepherd Moses never led out of God's sight, Ex. 3:1-6.

We are in constant peril of fearing men rather than God, and of seeking to please men rather than God. Men have dramatically exclaimed against "the tyrant of the skies," but all the while the despotism from which they really suffer proceeds from earthly tyrants, or their fears of men who will melt away under the glances of God as snow under June suns. May we so grow in grace and the knowledge of the Lord Jesus that all that we do may be done as unto the Lord and his approving smile in secret be sweeter to us than the plaudits of any earthly assembly.

Ostentatious giving suggests secret covetousness to the worldly wise; and fasting would better be revealed through continence and a chastened life than by publication of one's abstention from food; and the voice of one who prays only in public soon loses its power to penetrate very far into the upper deeps. On the other hand, the fear of publicity is no justification for our not praying or fasting or giving. It is our duty and privilege to do these things. We should remember, too, there is a moral quality not only in the doing but in the motive with which we do.

"Lord, I have shut my door—
  Shut out life's cares and fretting noise;
Here in this silence they intrude no more.
  Speak thou, and heavenly joys
Shall fill my heart with music, sweet and calm—
A heavenly psalm.

"Lord, I have shut my door!
  Come, thou, and visit me: I am alone.
Come, as when doors were shut, thou camest of yore
  And visitedest thine own.
My Lord, I kneel with reverent love and fear,

There is nothing in its mere publicity that detracts from the merit of prayerfulness and almsgiving. Publicity rather adds to the value of noble doing by reason of the testimony it bears to the doer's knowledge of what ought to be done and also the inspiration to emulation it is to others. If the achievements are for the sake of publicity or because of it, there are no moral excellencies inhering in them; but if they are done notwithstanding publicity and would have been performed in secret for the sake of the doing of them had secrecy been possible, then the spirit that prompts one to do his duty in full public view, to thus coronate his Lord before many gainsayers is commendable and will accomplish a greater good and bring a richer reward.

A decent respect for the good opinion of others is commendable and some essential qualities are lacking in those who utterly disregard the sentiments of others toward themselves. It is well that our neighbors know we are praying disciples and that we are generous to the poor. But we must be on our guard when praying in public lest during our petitions our thoughts be more on our listening neighbors than with him who hears and answers prayer. Likewise with our alms, lest the money be given rather to buy the encomia of the witnesses than in Christ's name to relieve distress. There are certain compensations with which society rewards us for prayerfulness and generousness, but they are very inconsequental in comparison with the riches of grace he bestows unto whom we should pray and for whom we should give.

THE TRANSFIGURATION.—Luke 9:28-36.

Memory verses, 30, 31.

Golden Text.—This is my beloved son; hear him.—Luke 9:35.

It was appropriate that the transfiguration should occur in close connection with Peter's great confession and that it should be both preceded and followed by a prediction of the death and resurrection. The fact of the Messiahship being clearly understood, as Peter's confession showed, it was necessary that the conception of the Messiahship should be enlarged and enriched. The foretelling of the death and resurrection, in so far as it was understood and believed, had this effect. But after telling of the suffering and disgrace which were to come upon him, it was expedient that the faith of the apostles should be strengthened by some exhibition of the glory and dignity of his person. This was accomplished by the transfiguration.

The transfiguration was a translation or interpretation of spiritual glories in terms appreciable to the physical senses. A brilliant outburst of light has often been connected with the idea of the divine presence. Moses saw a flaming bush. The angels at the tomb appeared in dazzling apparel. Saul at his conversion saw a light of blinding brilliancy.

Among all the incidents recorded in the life of our Lord none perhaps was more clearly miraculous than this appearance on the mountain top in the presence of Moses and Elijah. Yet in another sense it was less extraordinary than the more natural events of his life. In human form the essential divinity of the person of Christ was veiled and in a measure concealed. He appeared as other men. Now his divinity shines out and he shows himself as he really is. It is as if a prince, traveling incognito in a foreign country in the costume and state of an ordinary citizen, should please for a brief time to resume his princely apparel and appear in all the magnificence proper to his position, and then again resume his incognito. That brief period would be the most natural and normal feature of the whole journey.

Peter's enthusiastic suggestion was very like him. Carried away by the joy of the moment he forgot the world below the mountain top, made no account of the approaching suffering and victory of which he had so recently learned, and planned only to perpetuate a supremely enjoyable experience. The same sentiment is expressed in the well-meant but shallow stanza of the old hymn:

"My willing soul would stay
In such a frame as this,
And sit and sing itself away
To everlasting bliss."

That is a wholly false idea of religion. These moments of spiritual exaltation may come and ought to come in every religious experience, but they are not to be selfishly enjoyed or cherished to the neglect of the practical duties of life. This is true of all the blessings and privileges of life. They are given to be enjoyed, but also to be used for the strengthening of life for service. When visions or blessed experiences of any kind come to us, we are to receive and enjoy them, grow strong on them and use that strength for the common good.

The voice from the cloud had value to these chosen apostles because they were prepared to hear it. If the same voice had come to the crowd that thronged about Jesus in the earlier days of his ministry it would not have vitally affected their attitude to him. We need not miracles for the confirmation of our faith, but faith for the confirmation of our miracles. Not by any spectacular or unnatural means can faith be created in the heart or men brought into right relation to Jesus. We can not plead the lack of these things to excuse the feebleness of our faith. If the person and character of Jesus are not convincing to us we could not profit by a voice from heaven.

The vision faded, and when these disciples looked up "they saw no man save Jesus only." So fade the bright creations of hope and fancy. Not one in a hundred comes to realization, and even these fade though more slowly. But there are some abiding things. We are not in a universe of dissolving unrealities. Jesus stands to us for all those things of enduring worth to which the soul dare anchor. If, when we raise our eyes after the passing of any vision of hope, we can see Jesus only, we shall see all that we need to see.

THE GLORIFIED LIFE.—John 17:1-10 22:24.

| S. | Topic. | |

God intends us to be more than satellites reflecting his glory. He wishes us to be suns ourselves, sources of glory and glorifying. But he would have us of his substance and image and nature. The harmony of the universe was discovered by Bunsen, who exclaimed: "The stuff burning in the stars is the same as that feeding our fires." When our glory is the same as God's, then is the harmony between men and angels made complete.

In religious symbolism glory is the representation of the emanation of light from a sanctified being or one of the highest and holiest spiritual powers. We are all conscious of the great difference in the face lights of our friends; some are suggestive of benignity and holy idealism, and others of less gracious emotions. It should be one of our favorite ambitions to so live that the glory of sanctity would ray forth from us as light beams from the sun. This is entering in here into the glorified life.

In the days of prophets and apostles there was the glory of royal magnificence, the renown of statesmanship, the pride of oratory and the splendor of military conquest; but how transitory and meaningless all those laurels in comparison with the crown of martyrdom rudely thrust on the brows of those holy men of God. Only God's peace is real peace, and his glory the only glory that endures and blesses. Let us seek it even in lions' dens and desert places rather than worldly glory in camp, or court, or temple.

We speak of the glorious victory of Yorktown, but the discerning will attribute even greater glory to those colonials enduring unmurmuringly the horrors of Valley Forge. We sing of the glorified hosts of heaven, but doubtless the all-seeing Eye sees glory of life and achievement as gratifying to him in places of lowly obscurity where his children resist evil and champion the right for truth's sake as any witnessed amid the splendors of heaven. Let us learn that everywhere may glory be won and nobly borne.

Jesus would be glorified that he might in turn glorify the Father. Likewise should all our honors be laid at the foot of the throne. If we have the power wealth confers, the influence social position gives, or the prestige of political rank, we should consider them as opportunities for the advancement of sacred interests, both earthly and heavenly. In using them for enlarging the sphere of the glorified life we will become participants in the Father's joy of blessing his own. Just to the extent that we forget ourselves in an abandon of love for others do we add to the glorified life of the world.

There are some gems with a peculiar property enabling them to reflect all through the night the light with which they have been surcharged through the day. "The glory of the Lord abode upon Mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days." Moses went up into the mountain, and when he returned his face so shone that he must wear a veil that the people might speak with him. Likewise the glory of the light of truth, the glory of the Lord's presence we should bear with us among the people and into the haunts of darkness and sin. The inner fires of this glory we must sustain with prayer, Bible study and sanctified activity.

Jesus prayed to be glorified, and it is not unworthy any of his followers to seek the glory he sought, that is the honor, love and successful co-operation of others. Such glory is not inconsistent with that meekness Christians are taught to inculcate, for it is not for self-gratification, but rather for the attainment of God's purposes with us in the world. With this true glory we each may be glorified. Its area may not be large, for only few may be directly influenced by our feeble powers, but it may be intense, for we may live so altruistically that those who do know us may greatly love and honor us in the Lord. Rather such glory from a few than mere admiration from a nation.

Chemical Department, South Carolina College.

COLUMBIA, S. C., JAN. 17, 1906.

Mr. H. D. Crosswell,
Care Columbia Coca-Cola Bottling Co.,
Columbia, S. C.

Dear Sir:

This is to certify that, pursuant to your request, I have bought in the open market (from the Murray Drug Co.) an original package of five gallons of Coca Cola syrup, bearing the label of "The Coca Cola Company, Atlanta, Ga.," and have subjected the same to careful analysis.

The object of this investigation being to establish the presence or absence of cocaine, and possibly of other injurious alkoloids, I operated on quantities of three to five times the amount contained in a bottle of the carbonated beverage. The extractions of the syrup were repeated until the alkaloids were entirely removed, and different immiscible solvents were used on different portions. The crystalline substance thus obtained was further separated by fractional extractions, after which it was concentrated and tested. Since this concentrated product, which would contain all of the cocaine, failed to respond to the tests for cocaine, it is clear that the alkaloid is absent, or, if present at all, then in quantities too minute to allow of detection.

The active constituent of Coca-Cola Syrup proved to be caffeine, and in quantities seemingly less than in a cup of good coffee or tea.

There was no evidence of the presence of other alkaloids.

Yours truly,

Are They Right?

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I have during the past few months been reading with much profit to myself the pages of The Christian-Evangelist. Formerly my attention had been directed to the "Christian-Standard," and I had come to regard the religious body known as Disciples of Christ as extremely sectarian. I have come to see them in a different light since I commenced reading The Christian-Evangelist. In the issue of May 10, under the title, "A Question of Relationship," the position taken by The Christian-Evangelist seems to me to be both logical and Christian. In view of a statement made in that article that "the church of Christ is made up, not of isms of any kind, nor of forms, nor theories of church government, true or false, but of believers in Christ who share his life and who are in the process of being conformed to his image," I can not understand why ministers in the so-called churches of Christ positively refuse to admit to their fellowship a person whose life is prolific with spiritual fruit, but who has never been immersed. Are these preachers right or wrong in this attitude?

In the same issue, under the heading "Notes and Comments," the writer affirms that "man in his present condition needs some concrete act in which to externalize, or objectify, his faith and purpose to assure both himself and others of his willingness to surrender to Christ, his Savior and Lord." This is undoubtedly true of many people, but can it be truly said of all persons? Are there not some minds so constituted as to be able to lay hold of the great verities of the Gospel without the aid of any concrete act, and who find any rite or symbol a hindrance rather than a help to their spiritual progress? I firmly believe there are such persons. I therefore can not understand how the church can be united on any basis that is not as broad as that laid down by Jesus. "He that is not against us is for us" (Luke 9:50).

New Windsor, Colo. A Reader.

[Answering the question which our correspondent asks, "Are these preachers right or wrong in this attitude?" we reply we think they are right. Our historic position as a Christian union movement in relation to the subject of baptism was and is that we must occupy common, undisputed ground. Baptism, regarded as a symbol of the burial and resurrection of Christ, and as a pledge of the believer's own death to sin and his resurrection to newness of life, is everywhere and by all accepted as valid baptism. Other "modes" are not so regarded. If we are, therefore, to occupy ground upon which all can stand, without sacrifice of truth or conscience, we must accept that form of baptism that has the stamp of catholicity, as well as the sanction of the world's best scholarship. Besides, we set out to reproduce, in its constitutional features, the church of the New Testament—its faith, its ordinances, and its life. We would not be true to this aim were we to turn aside from what we understand the clear New Testament teaching to be, upon this subject. If there should be any new light shed upon this question, showing that this understanding of New Testament practice is wrong, our practice should be immediately changed to conform to the truer understanding of Christ's will. It is one thing to recognize the Christian character of those who are loyal to Christ's teachings, as they understand it, and who bring forth the fruit of the Spirit in their lives, and quite a different thing to depart from our own convictions of what Christ has taught and commanded. Nor can we plead freedom from responsibility as to whether the practice of the churches to which we severally belong shall conform, in this respect to the New Testament pattern. So, at least, it seems to us with our present light, and that is what each one of us must be governed by.

Referring to the second question, as to whether it is a universal truth that "man in his present condition needs some concrete act in which to externalize or objectify his faith, etc.," we think this is as universal as our ordinary human nature, and sufficiently so to have justified the command of Christ, which is universal. There are other uses of baptism than that of giving assurance of acceptance with God, which are closely allied with that. It is entering into a covenant with God in Christ; it is obedience to the command of Christ; it is symbolic of the burial and resurrection of Christ; it is the initial and transitional act by which one enters into the Church of Christ, and into the fellowship of the saved. All these reasons would seem to justify our practice in conforming to the apostolic rule and New Testament example on this subject.—Editor.]

Our Supply of Ministers.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

In your columns of May 24 Bro. Allen Hickey writes under the heading "Fifty-Two Applicants," and concludes that there must be a surplus of preachers, since there were 52 applicants for one vacant place. At first thought one might infer the same condition, and from such conclusions young men would be discouraged from preparation for the ministry. There is a great shortage, and many needy fields can not be cultivated for want of men. We have over 4,000 more churches than ministers, and of our 6,000 ministers probably one-fourth are not in charge of churches, but are doing missionary work, evangelistic work or some special work, or are retired from ministerial work.

An analysis of the list of 52 applicants for the position would surprise many. Doubtless these applications came in response to an advertisement, and it is rather a wonder that out of the 4,000 ministers who probably read the advertisement there were not more who felt like making a change of location. Among those who sent applications would be found several well-known ministers with a record of good results, and some of them known to be able men in the pulpit. Of these some of them have been temporarily retired by bad health or other conditions and are ready to begin work again. A few of them doubtless are men who are just starting in the ministry and have not found a satisfactory field yet. The great majority is made up of restless spirits who are constantly on the move. Some of these are men of good ability, but are never content with what they have. While it would be a blessing to the world and a great help to our work if we had from 1,000 to 2,000 more good, consecrated men in the ministry in our own fields, still we are better off in our supply than most of the religious bodies around us. The theological seminaries of these bodies are falling farther behind year by year in the number of ministerial students, while our own schools showed an attendance of about 700 ministerial students last year; and the number is increasing, but not as rapidly as the needs of our work. By all means encourage consecrated Christian young men to enter the ministry. We need them and it is the world's greatest work. D. T. Stanley.

THE WAY TO FREEDOM FOUND AT LAST

During the past few years there have been offered to the public quite a large number of alleged "cures" and methods of treatment for the liquor habit, and for addictions to narcotic drugs—opium, morphine, cocaine, laudanum, etc., etc. Some of these have possessed considerable merit, while a great many have been and are out-and-out frauds. Without exception all have had serious defects. But now there is for the first time announced to the public the discovery of a cure that seems perfect—a treatment that up to date has a record of one hundred per cent of cures. This treatment is safe, sure, permanent, and is absolutely painless.

THE WHISKEY CURE

We cure the liquor habit to stay cured. It is not a difficult matter to sober a man up after a drunk, and that is all that many alleged "cures" accomplish. We do not regard a patient as cured until his diseased nerves have been brought back into a normal, healthy condition where they no longer demand a stimulant. In other words, we cure by removing the cause of the disease. We are anxious to treat patients who have relapsed from other treatments. We have cured many cases of alcoholism that had taken one treatment after another without permanent result. We have taken men screaming and fighting in the toils of delirium tremens, and within two hours had them quiet, comfortable, rational and ready to go to sleep. We have permanently cured every case we have treated, and every patient who has been under our case is enthusiastic in his indorsement of "The Shepherd Treatment."

THE MORPHINE CURE

Even more wonderful in its results, if that be possible, is our treatment for the morphine habit and other narcotic drug addictions. Not only do we actually take away from the patient any desire for the soul-and-body-destroying drug, but we do this absolutely without pain, nervousness or discomfort of any kind. This sounds almost too good to be true, yet it is but the sober, simple truth. We have cured persons who had previously taken, in vain, from ten to twenty other treatments and spent thousands of dollars in their efforts to gain freedom from this terrible habit. We use no hypodermics. From the first dose of our medicine the patient has no craving for morphine; he sleeps well, eats well and feels well. If necessary, he is able to attend to his business. There is no other cure for the drug habit that can compare in effectiveness, in painlessness or general worth with "The Shepherd Treatment."

We have prepared a little booklet, telling all about these habits and their cure, which we send free, on request. All that is necessary is for you to send us your name and address, and the book is sent without cost to you. If you are yourself in the slavery of drink or drugs, or if you have a friend or relative who is addicted to either habit, you should not fail to secure a copy of this booklet. It is written by one who was for years a slave to morphine, and it will interest you, whether you wish to take the treatment or not. Address

SPRONG.

It is with deep sorrow that I report the death of Sister Clara Hastings Sprong, a daughter of Elder and Z. S. Hastings, of Effingham, Kan. At Potter, Kan., she entered into the life abundant when she answered the call of death, on May 23, 1906, at the age of 28 years. When but 9 years of age she made the good confession and was baptized by her father. From the beginning of her Christian life she was active in her Master's service, showing a special interest in the Junior and Young People's Societies. Her services were highly appreciated; her splendid counsel and example were of inestimable worth to the young people, who recognized in her a thorough Christian. She was a graduate of Drake Normal School, of Des Moines, Ia., and a very successful and efficient teacher. On June 25, 1905, she was married to Mr. Charles G. Sprong, of Potter, Kan., her father officiating. Besides her loving and kind husband, she leaves an infant daughter, Ethel, her kind parents, four brothers and an exceptionally large circle of friends.

The funeral services, conducted by W. T. Hilton, of Atchison, Kan., were held at Potter, Kan., after which the body was laid to rest in the Round Prairie Cemetery, near Potter, by the side of little Edith, a twin sister of Ethel.

The memory of such a life is as the twilight after the golden sun has set. It is a precious memory of service. Service was to her a genuine pleasure. For her Master she served, whose guiding hand she trusted. Her life was genuine, sweet and gentle. A deep religious fervor characterized it throughout. Pious, consecrated and devoted, she loved the church. When verses are forgotten and chiseled inscriptions grow dim, her influence will still go on. Happy, calm and serene she fell asleep to awaken in brighter realms.

To-day's Furrow.

Sow the shining seeds of service
  In the furrows of each day,
Plant each one with serious purpose,
  In a hopeful, tender way.
Never lose one seed, nor cast it
  Wrongly with an hurried hand;
Take full time to lay it wisely,
  Where and how thy God hath planned.

This the blessed way of sharing
  With another soul your gains,
While, though losing life, you find it
  Yielding fruit on golden plains;
For the soul which sows its blessings
  Great or small, in word or smile,
Gathers as the Master promised,
  Either here or after while.

Sow this day the seed of service
  In some life, as you can spare,
Bend above the soul you strengthen
  For a moment's silent prayer.
Trust that somehow God will nurture
  Deeds which love and faith afford
Till the angel hands shall reap them
  For the garners of the Lord.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART II.

CHAPTER VIII.

Nelsie Loraine had forgotten that there was a Great Surprise still in store for her and Mrs. De Fer, but she now remembered the ends of the ropes which had dangled through the square hole in the ceiling. She looked behind her, for during the play she had given her attention entirely to the presentation of "Prometheus in Chains." The ropes had disappeared. The stage curtain was now whisked out of sight and Raymund Revore and Jack Bellfield came to the audience. Jack still wore his gilded crown and fleecy white robe as Jupiter, and looked very fine. Raymund, as befitted one whose only excuse in a play is to tell the moral it teaches, wore his ordinary, and we might add, his only, suit of clothes.

"Now," said Raymund, as the ladies rose, "we are about to take a flight through the air to the Great Surprise. It is a labyrinth. Jack thought of it, and he and Tom and Fred furnished the goods. I helped to plan it." As he spoke, two chairs were lowered through the square opening in the ceiling. Each was securely fastened to a rope in such a way that it could not tilt too much. "Here come the Magic Chariots," said Jack, stepping back as the legs of one of the chairs threatened to smite him upon the nose. "They are raised and lowered by Fairies. Be seated, fair ladies, and ascend to the Great Surprise."

"I thank you, but no, no!" cried the little French lady volubly. "It is too unstable."

Raymund's face showed such acute disappointment that Nelsie Loraine said, "You two go up, and if you get there safe, maybe we will try it."

"The Fairies," Raymund confided, "are just Tom and Fred, and you know what strong men they are. They would never let go, and the ropes move over greased rollers, fastened to the wall, upstairs."

"Come on, Ray," said Jack, "we'll show these Missourians!" So the boys seated themselves and were drawn aloft. After some hesitation, Mrs. De Fer and Nelsie Loraine took the Magic Chariots, and the Fairies got them safely above. They found themselves in a little square chamber whose sides were of cotton cloth, tacked to the floor and to slender pine frames. On the floor stood a lighted lantern, which Raymund picked up, saying, "Follow me." He pulled aside one end of the room which had been left untacked, and they looked down a long hall of pink muslin, just wide enough for a person to pass along. Nelsie Loraine gave an exclamation of surprise. "Where are we?" she exclaimed as they followed Raymund on and on, for what seemed a great distance.

"We are at the top of my beanstalk," said Jack. The hall made a turn and then another and another, till the guests were completely bewildered. "I feel," said Mrs. De Fer, "that this is really the work of fairies!" The pink muslin walls showed a mellow tint as the lantern light flashed along them. There was no ceiling overhead, except the unplastered ceiling of the house, but Raymund held the lantern in such a way that one hardly realized that the pink walls extended only a few inches higher than their heads, and that above them were dusty beams and cobwebbed timbers. At last the pink hall came to an end. Further progress was cut off by a hanging of blue muslin. "We have now come," said Raymund, 'to the Museum of Curiosities." He pulled aside the obstructing drapery, and they entered a little blue room, about eight feet square. The floor was also covered with blue muslin. "Ah," cried Mrs. De Fer, as the light of three little colored wax candles fell upon her. "Ah, ah, one's complexion!" Blue, it seemed, did not agree with her looks. In one corner of the room was a box, from which shone the candles; they had been stuck on end in their own melted wax. On top of the box was a pasteboard square. Raymund picked it up and read, "How to keep chickens out of the yard." Then he looked at the company, "Now, guess that!"

"Shoe!" cried Nelsie Loraine, beginning to understand.

"That's right," said Jack, diving into the box and bringing out a huge misshapen old shoe. "Shall I pass it around among the ladies?"

"Ah, thanks, no," cried Mrs. De Fer, backing a little, and holding a dainty handkerchief to one side of her face to keep off as much blue reflection as possible.

Raymund read, "Used in sewing, on the Fourth of July."

"What does that mean?" asked Nelsie Loraine. "Why is the Fourth of July different from any other day? I guess needles, but I don't see the point."

"Then look out, or you'll get stuck," Mrs. De Fer cautioned her. Jack took a pair of scissors out of the box, and explained, "Don't you know when a firecracker gets broken in the middle and you light it, it sizzes? So it is a sizzer; and these are scissors."

"I think," Nelsie Loraine remarked, "that is pretty far fetched, Jack!"

"Well," said Jack, "I think it was brought from a considerable distance, myself. Go on, Ray!"

Raymund read again: "Something goats are very fond of."

"I know that," cried Mrs. De Fer "for I once had a goat, and the answer is Pillowslips."

"No," said Jack, and he held up a button.

Raymund continued, "The best thing to do with an egg."

"Hatchet!" cried Nelsie Loraine. "That's two for me. It's mighty straining on my mind, but go ahead."

"A man who lives all alone."

"Hermit!" cried Mrs. De Fer. Jack took a mitten out of the box.

"Whose is it?" asked Nelsie Loraine.

"That isn't the point," Jack returned. "It's a girl's mit, and that gives us her-mit."

Raymund read, "Where do we go to be married?"

"That's what I'm interested in," said Nelsie Loraine, laughing. "You'll never catch me being an old maid. I'm going to marry real young."

"So am I," said Jack. "You won't be ready before I am!"

"Children!" cried Mrs. De Fer. Then they all laughed. "But what was the answer?" Jack took a piece of tar out of the box. "That's it," he said. "you can see it's all tar. The answer is altar."

After other curiosities had been explained, they went out of the blue chamber into a blue hallway as narrow as the one of pink. "I don't understand this at all," said Nelsie Loraine. "Are we still in the second story? Have you built to the house? We have walked a quarter of a mile, it seems like!"

"We are just fairly started," said Raymund, chuckling. "You see there are five rooms downstairs, but all this attic was left unfinished, so we have made so many halls, winding about, that I don't know how far it is, to the end. We will soon be to the Conundrum Chamber." It was not long before he stopped before a curtain of white cotton. "Now," he said, "no one can enter here who doesn't tell a conundrum. Of course it may be on old one, but we'd rather have something new."

"This is mine," said Mrs. De Fer. "In what way is a tramp just the opposite of an industrious workman?"

"We give it up," said Raymund, "but because we have no time to guess, there is so much ahead of us. All we can do is to tell the conundrum."

"The answer is that a tramp saw wood, but the industrious workman would saw."

"You mean the tramp just saw it and wouldn't do anything," observed Nelsie Loraine. "I do not think it very good, Mrs. De Fer, but it's better than mine. Mine is: "Why is a dog's tail different from a horse's tail? It isn't a good one, but it is all I can think of. The answer is that the horse's tail is on one end and the dog's tail on the other."

"On the other what?" asked Mrs. De Fer.

"Why, on the dog, of course," said Nelsie Loraine, laughing, "and now it is on you for asking!"

"Mine," said Jack, "is this: What letter is always in a vase?"

"Pshaw!" cried Nelsie Loraine, "there are four answers to that, for every letter in the word is always in vase!"

"Well," retorted Jack, "just name one for instance."

"Well," returned Nelsie Loraine, triumphantly, v is, for one."

"Why, no!" retorted Jack, "V is for five; I thought you learned that in arithmetic!" This time the others laughed a little louder than Nelsie Loraine. Then Raymund said, "And my conundrum is this: To explain the conundrum of the Conundrum Chamber. Let's go in there and you'll understand." He pulled aside the white flap and they entered a mere box of an apartment, formed of white cotton, without a ceiling. On the opposite side was painted in huge black letters, "When you come in, shout Thirteen." Raymund shouted "Thirteen," in a deep voice and held his lantern to the printed line. Jack shouted "Thirteen!" and so did the others. When this ceremony was finished Raymund said: "That is our mystic number. Please don't forget. It is supposed to be unlucky. Now, Jack, when you came in here, what did you do?"

"I shouted," said Jack.

"Correct," said Raymund, nodding, "and what did you do, Mrs. De Fer?"

"I shouted, too," said the little French lady.

"Oh!" Raymund smiled, "I thought you shouted 'Thirteen!'" They laughed a little louder than Mrs. De Fer, then Raymund said, "But we must hurry on. We have still the Music Palace, the Distortion Room and the Dining-Room-in-the-Air, to visit."

God wants the boys, the merry, merry boys,
The noisy boys, the funny boys,
The thoughtless boys—
God wants the boys, with all their joys,
That He as gold may make them pure,
And teach them trials to endure;
His heroes brave he'd have them be,
Fighting for truth and purity.
God wants the boys.

God wants the happy-hearted girls,
The loving girls, the best of girls.
The worst of girls—
God wants to make the girls His pearls,
And to reflect His holy face,
And bring to mind His wondrous grace,
That beautiful the world may be,

The Man Who Died For Me.

Many years ago I wanted to go as a foreign missionary, but as my way seemed hedged about, and as the years came and went, I went to live on the Pacific Coast, in California. Life was rough in the mining country where I lived with my husband and little boys. I heard of a man who lived over the hills, who was dying of consumption, and they said: "He is so vile no one can stand it to stay with him, so the men place some food near him, and leave him 24 hours." And added, "They'll find him dead some time, and the quicker the better. Never had a soul, I guess."

The pity of it all haunted me as I went about my work, and I tried for three days to get some one to go and see him, and find out if he was in need of better care. As I turned from the last man, vexed with his indifference, the thought came to me, "Why don't you go, yourself? Here's missionary work if you want it."

I'll not tell how I weighed the probable uselessness of my going, or how I shrank from one so vile as he. It wasn't the kind of work I wanted. At last one day I went over the hills to the little adobe or mud cabin. It was just one room. The door stood open, and up in one corner, on some straw and colored blankets, I found the dying man. Sin had left awful marks on his face, and if I had not heard that he could not move I should have retreated.

As my shadow fell on the floor he looked up and greeted me with a dreadful oath. I stepped forward a little, and there came another oath.

"Don't speak so, my friend," said I.

"I ain't your friend. I ain't got any friends," said he.

"Well, I am yours, and—" but the oaths came thickly, as he said:

"You ain't my friend. I never had any friends, and I never want any."

I reached out at arm's length the fruit I had brought him, and stepping back to the doorway I asked him if he remembered his mother, hoping to find a tender place in his heart; but he cursed her. I asked if he had a wife, and he cursed her. I spoke of God and he cursed him. I tried to speak of Jesus and his death for us, but he stopped me with his oaths, and said:

"That's all a lie. Nobody ever died for others."

I went away discouraged. I said to myself, "I knew it was no use." The next day I went back again, and went every day for two weeks, but he did not show the gratitude of a dog. At the end of that time, I said: "I'm not going any more." That night when I was putting my little boys to bed, I did not pray for the miner as I had been accustomed to do. My little Charley noticed it, and said:

"Mamma, you did not pray for the bad man."

"No," I answered, with a sigh.

"Have you given him up, mamma? Ought you to give him up till God does?"

That night I could not sleep. That man dying, and so vile, with no one to care. I got up and went away by myself to pray, but the moment I touched my knees I was overpowered by the sense of how little meaning there had been to my prayers. I had no faith, and I had not really cared, beyond a kind of half-hearted sentiment. I had not claimed his soul for God. Oh, the shame, the shame, of a missionary zeal like that! I fell on my face, literally, as I cried: "Oh, Christ, give me a little glimpse of the worth of a human soul!"

Did you, Christian, ever ask that and mean it? Don't do it, unless you are willing to give up ease and selfish pleasure, for life will be a different thing to you after that revelation. I stayed on my knees until Calvary became a reality to me. I can not describe those hours. They came and went unheeded; but I learned that night what I had never known before—what it was to travail for a human soul. I saw my Lord as I had never seen him before. I stayed till the answer came.

As I went back to my room my husband asked, "How about your miner?"

"He is going to be saved," I answered.

"How are you going to do it?"

"The Lord is going to save him, and I don't know that I shall do anything about it," I replied.

The next morning brought a lesson in Christian work I had never learned before. I had waited on other days until afternoon, when, my work being over, I could change my dress, put on my gloves and take a walk while the shadows were on the hillsides.

That day the moment my little boys were off to school, I left my work, and without gloves or shadows, hurried over the hills, not to see that "vile wretch," but to win a soul. I thought the man might die; there was a human soul in the balance, and I wanted to get there quickly.

As I passed, a neighbor came out of her cabin, and said: "I will go over the hills with you, I guess." I did not want her, but it was another lesson for me. God could plan better than I could. She had her little girl with her, and as we reached the cabin. she said. “I'll wait out here, and you hurry, won't you?”

I do not know what I expected, but the man greeted me with an awful oath; but it did not hurt me as before, for I was behind Christ, and I stayed there. I could bear what struck him first. While I was changing the basin of water and towel for him, things which I had done every day, and which he had used but never thanked me for, the clear laugh of the little girl rang out upon the air like a bird note.

“Would you mind letting her come in?” he said, in a tone different from any I had heard him use before.

Stepping to the door, I beckoned to her, and taking her by the hand, said: “Come in and see the sick man, Mamie.”

She shrank back when she saw his face and said, “I'm afraid.”

I assured her: “Poor, sick man; he can't get up, and he wants to see you.”

She looked like an angel; her bright face; her eyes tender and pitiful. In her hands she carried the flowers she had picked, and bending toward him, she said: “I sorry for 'oo, sick man; will 'oo have a posy?”

He laid his great bony hand beyond the flowers on the plump hand of the child and great tears came as he said: “I had a little girl once and she died. Her name was Mamie. She cared for me. Nobody else did. Guess I'd been different if she'd lived. I've hated everybody since she died.”

I knew at once that I had the key to that man's heart. The thought came quickly, born of that midnight prayer, and I said: “When I spoke of your mother and your wife you cursed them; I know now that they were not good women—you could not have cursed a good mother.”

“Good women! Oh, you don't know nothing 'bout that kind of women! You can't think what kind they were!”

“Well, if your little girl had lived and grown up with them, wouldn't she have been just like them? Would you have liked to have her live for that?”

He evidently had never thought of it, for his great eyes looked off for a full minute. As they came back to mine, he cried: “Oh, God, no! I'd killed her first. I'm glad she died!”

Reaching out and taking the poor hand, I said:

“The dear Lord did not want her to be like them. He loved her even better than you did; so he took her away where she could be cared for by the angels. He is keeping her for you. To-day she is waiting for you. Don't you want to see her again?”

“Oh, I'd be willing to be burned alive a thousand times if I could see my little girl once more, my Mamie!”

* * * * * *

Oh, friends, you know what a blessed story I had then to tell; I had been so close to Calvary that I could tell it in earnest! The poor face grew ashy pale as I talked, and the poor man threw up his arms as though his agony was mastering him Two or three times he gasped as though losing breath. Then, clutching me, he said:

“What's that, woman, you said the other day about talking to somebody out o' sight?”

“It's praying. I tell him what I want,” I said.

“Pray now! pray quick! Tell him 'I want my little girl again.' Tell him anything you want to.”

I took the hands of the child and placed them on the trembling hands of the man and bade her pray for the man who had lost his little Mamie and wanted to see her again.

This was the prayer: “Dear Jesus, this man is sick. He has lost his 'ittle girl and he feels bad about it. I'se so sorry for him, and he's so sorry, too. Won't you help him? Do, please. Amen.”

Heaven seemed to open before us. There stood One with the prints of the nails in his hands and the wound in his side. Mamie slipped away soon, but the man kept saying:

“Tell him more; tell him everything! But, oh, you don't know!”

Then he poured out such a torrent of confession of his life that I could not have borne it but for the One who was close to us that hour. You, Christian worker, know how he reached out after that lost soul. By and by the poor man grasped the strong hands.

It was the third day when the poor, tired soul turned from everything to him, the Mighty to save, “The Man who died for me.” He lived on for weeks as though God would show how real was the change. I had been telling him about a meeting, and he said:

“I'd like to go to a meeting once; I never went to one of them things.”

So we planned a meeting, and the men came from the mills and mines and filled the room. Then said he:

‘Now, boys, get down on your knees while she tells you 'bout that Man that died for me.”

I had been brought up to believe that a woman shouldn't speak in meeting, but I found myself telling the simple story of the cross. After awhile he said:

“Oh, boys, you don't half believe it, or you'd cry; you couldn't help it. Boys, raise me up. I'd like to tell it once!”

They raised him up, and between his short breathing and coughing, he told the story. He used the language he knew:

“Boys, you know how the water runs down the sluice boxes and carries off all the dirt and leaves the gold behind. Well, the blood of that Man she tells about went right over me just like that; it carried off 'bout everything; but it left enough for me to see Mamie and to see the Man that died for me. Oh, boys, can't you love him?”

Some days after this there came a look into his face that the end was near. I had to leave him, and I said, “What shall I say to-night, Jack?”

“Just good-night,” he said

“What will you say to me when we meet again?”

“I'll say ‘good-morning’ up there.”

The next morning the door was closed and I found two of the men sitting silently by a board stretched across two stools. They turned back the sheet from the dead, and I looked on the face, which seemed to have come nearer to the “image of God.”

“I wish you could have seen him when he went,” they said.

“Tell me all about it.”

“Well, all at once he brightened up 'bout midnight, and smilin', said, ‘I'm goin', boys. Tell her I'm goin' to see Mamie. Tell her I'm goin' to see the Man that died for me,’ and he was gone.”

Kneeling there, with my hands over those poor cold ones, that had been stained with human blood, I asked to come to understand more and more the worth of a human soul, and to be drawn into deeper sympathy with Christ's yearning compassion, “Not willing that any should perish.”—*Mrs. J. ## Apple Blossoms.

BY ALICE A. FROST.

Of the dear delights of springtime,
We've waited long to see,
There's naught so charms us with its spell,
As the fragrant apple tree!
Oh, the blushing, witching sweetness
Of the apple blossom—see?

We love the pansy blossom,
With its thoughtful little face,
And the never-failing violet,
So early in its place,
But what is so sense-bewitching
As the apple blossom's grace?

A Panther Week in Mahoba.

Dear Friends: I am going to write you such a letter as, I think I may safely say, I have never before written, and such as I certainly do not expect to write again! Many times in the home land I was besieged by the younger people for jungle tales of tigers, wild elephants, etc. Then I had but vague ones to relate, but we have had a panther week in Mahoba, and I have some stories which I can not resist telling, though I almost wish my parents were not quite such voracious readers of our periodicals, and some of the other parties concerned will wish their relatives to forgive them if they promise, as they are ready to do, to “be good” hereafter.

The hills about Mahoba, with their many great rocks, furnish beautiful landscapes and—panther dens. These huge cats steal out at night and play great havoc with the flocks of goats, sheep and cattle of the villagers. They are most daring, and come right up to the villages. A friend of ours who is a railway official, Mr. Sharpe, killed three panthers in one township this spring. He always makes it possible for us to see his trophies and tells us the story of his successful hunts. He makes real preparation for his game There is a live kid for a lure and an ambush for himself and some native shakaris (hunters), and all is in readiness near a panther rendezvous. When the panther pounces on the poor kid, Mr. Sharpe shoots, and he has been very successful in his shots, generally wounding to the death at once. A wounded panther is almost surely deadly to meet. The village people are grateful for the destruction of their enemy, and the government adds a bounty for the same. Mr Monroe is with us this week, and he and Mr. Gordon have occasionally taken their rifles with them to shoot deer or wild peafowl or some other edible game. They went a few evenings ago over to one of the hills where temples or shrines hide themselves among the rocks. A young priest lives over there who is weary of his useless temple service and is in search of a better hope, and Mr. Gordon expected to meet this young man also. He did meet him, and lingered a little way behind Mr. Monroe to talk with him. Mr. Monroe had seen a peafowl and went on after it up by the hills. While in this pursuit he looked up, and what did he see but a large panther lying at full length against one of the great rocks, as Mr. Monroe said "looking at me out of the corners of his eyes!" Quietly as possible he called, "Come along, Gordon, here is a panther!" Then without delay, before Mr. Gordon was there with the second gun, he dropped to his knees, took aim and fired! He heard something between a grunt and a groan, and saw the animal fall over as Mr. Gordon came running up. Although they believed the shot successful, even the most daring hunter would not go near a wounded panther till certain it was entirely dead, and not merely stunned or wounded. So they came on home, as it was getting dark. When one thinks of all the paraphernalia a hunter employs in hunting such dangerous game, it makes one's heart fairly stand still to think of a man's calmly sitting down and shooting a panther above him, as Mr. Monroe did as an incident of his evening walk! At least we have warningly teased our brother missionary, but his shot was so true and so prompt we do admire it wonderfully. Next morning the first sight I saw without was the huge, tawny form of a pantheress, which the two gentlemen had gone out to get very early in the morning. She had evidently died very soon after the shot, but not at once, for she had dragged herself along the rocky hillside till her claws were torn. The bullet had broken one rib, severed the spinal cord between two vertebrae, passed on and broken a rib on the other side!

The next day, Saturday, when I came out of my room, I found that Mrs. Sharpe and a young lady guest had just driven in with some more panther news. About a month ago Mr. Sharpe showed us a panther cage-trap he had made, a very ingenious affair, with a cage at one end for a kid bait and a big compartment for Mr. or Mrs. Panther to walk into and get caught. This he was to set out near a panther-tormented village, and Mrs. Sharpe had come to tell us that now, after about a month, the panther was actually caught. She said he had been imprisoned safely all night in the strong case, and none of us felt afraid to view him caged, but availed ourselves of the opportunity, excepting Miss Burgess and Dr. Gordon, who stayed with their Saturday's work. The caged panther was at our nearest village of Chandua. It was only a short drive, and we were soon there, where we found the whole village with Mr. Sharpe and a young Englishman from Jhansi, who was to be given the shooting of the panther. The cage had been placed right up against the wall of a house on the edge of the village toward the hills, this wall having no windows or doors in it. He had been a daring marauder, and now there was a certain pathos in the sight of the fierce enemy of the village so helpless in the face of its near public. It had beaten its head against the bars until it bled on either side. The little black kid was peacefully nibbling away in his compartment, quite undisturbed by his neighbor, whose growls we heard before we saw his mottled form. Miss Haight and I stood together in full view of the cage, but at a little distnace, when the young Englishman shot, and we were glad to turn away, for he had only wounded the animal. Again he shot, when Mr. Monroe shouted to us to get away! I wondered if the struggles of the wounded beast had broken a bar, or what, but I didn't stop to see, I assure you, but made for the village. We heard another shot, but it was all a mystery to us, what could have occurred that everybody was running, when Mr. Sharpe called out that danger was over. And this was what had happened: The young Englishman had hit a bar of the cage with his second bullet, and the bar bent and flew out, and the enraged, wounded animal squeezed out between the bars and was abroad, though disabled, amongst all that crowd, which, however, had fled in the same direction as we. Mr. Sharpe was right in the line of his flight, and he had only time to lift his rifle and take aim when the panther was about eight feet away. He shot and the ferocious, maimed animal deflected a few feet and fell dead! He had gone over the very spot where less than one minute before Miss Haight and I had stood! Even in that moment of excitement it was very clear to my mind that I belonged to a class of people whose generic name is spelled with four letters, the middle one being double "o," and I silently so designated myself, and later it came to me that Brother Power might use me as a telling illustration in one of his most famous lectures. I was one of the "Didn't know" kind! The whole thing occupied about an hour before breakfast. When we got back Doctor Gordon and Miss Burgess told us they had met "Smallpox" instead of "Panther," so we all had rather an unusual day. Our Orphanage girls who have smallpox seem to have it in a light form, and we hope there may be no serious cases nor a general epidemic.

Out on life's sea my shattered bark is drifting
With ragged sail. Awhile the storms are drear.

Her flashing signals of Christian hope and cheer,
And seem to hear the loving voice who said:

W. W. Dowling is universally recognized as the chief of our Bible commentators. This House alone is the medium through which his invaluable Helps are distributed among the churches. He is Editor-in-chief of our Bible school and Endeavor publications. Write us for free samples of his work.

If we have not printed the latest book, we can get it for you and at the lowest price. We also sell Ben Franklin's "Gospel Preacher," McGarvey's commentary, Campbell's complete works, Johnson's Notes on the New Testament, and practically all our "old reliable" literature. Special clubbing rates with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST made for all of these.

There were but thirteen columns of advertising in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We could have had fifty did we not exercise close censorship over them and exclude those of hazardous speculations and others of questionable propriety. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is not a business proposition, but aspires to be the most helpful Christian journal in the land. Is it not worth your while to place this paper in a new home?

Recently we announced that for a new subscription and a renewal accompanied by the necessary $3 we would send a picture (11x12½ inches) of Editor J. H. Garrison. Already orders are coming to us and will be filled immediately. The name of no other man among us is such a household word in cottage and mansion, in city and country, in our mountain vales and on the plains, among our schoolmen and disciples unknown to fame. It is well to secure this picture while the edition lasts.

The tidal wave of new subscriptions lifting us up into larger opportunities for usefulness is still rising. Generally they come by one helped disciple inducing his neighbor to subscribe, but among the lists of three or more going to one address we note the following received last week: Eleven from Sullivan, Ill., J. C. McNutt, minister; 10 from Mattoon, Ill., D. N. Wetzell, minister; 10 from Paris, Ky., Cary E. Morgan, pastor; 8 from Denver, Colo., J. E. Picketts, minister; 4 from Palmyra, Ill., T. R. ### A True Pearl.

One day a little baby girl came into a home in China. "Oh," you say, "that was just lovely!" But the baby's mother did not think so. She didn't want a little girl. A girl can not go out and earn money with which to buy rice for the family. Neither can she furnish the paper money, furniture, clothes, etc., which must be burned at the graves of parents, and are supposed to be changed into the real articles for their use in the spirit world. A girl is of no use.

So there were no firecrackers to let the neighbors know that she had arrived, and no feast given in honor of the event, as there would have been had she been a boy. The baby was never even given a name, but just called Girl.

She was wrapped in some old rags, put in a basket and allowed to remain there all day if her mother were at home, or tied to her back if she went to the riverside to wash. She had no toys. The house in which she lived had mud walls and floor, the windows were of paper, and the roof was thatched with straw. Festoons of cobwebs hung from the rafters. Sometimes these, becoming heavy with smoke, would break away and fall right on the baby's face, and, after being mingled with her tears, would leave her even more grimy than before. Two black pigs and several hens and chickens lived in the house with her.

As she grew older she was made the drudge for the household, and was obliged to scrape the rice kettle for her food, after her father and brothers had eaten.

One day her mother brought home a pretty earring, and her eyes shone with delight, as she thought it was for her. But she was doomed to disappointment. It was for her little brother. The mother was going to hang it in the ear of her precious boy to deceive the wicked spirits. They would see the earring and think him a girl, and not steal him away. For not even wicked spirits would care to steal a girl.

When she was 5 years old her grandmother said it was time to make her "lily feet." So she doubled under all her toes but the big one, brought the ball of the foot and the heel together, and bound them tightly with a long bandage. Did it hurt? Yes, indeed. Girl cried and begged to have her feet unbound; but her mother scolded and whipped her for crying, and said she could never find a husband for her if she had large feet like a slave's.

Soon after this her mother died, and her father brought her to our school, saying he could no longer care for her. Her great black, sad eyes appealed to us, and we took her into our love and home. We unbound her poor little crippled feet, gave her a bath and dressed her in clean clothes When shoes and stockings were put on her feet and she was told that never again was she to have the cruel bandages, she was overjoyed.

At night, after repeating, "Now I lay me," she was tucked away in a little crib under a bright colored patchwork quilt, and she looked as though she had found a real fairyland. Then, of course, we must give her a name. One of the older girls suggested that we call her True Pearl. Although she came out of a dirty Chinese house, we think her far more precious than the pearls that are found in oyster shells. She is one of the little ones for whom Christ died.—Christian Missionary Friend.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

In convention addresses, in many letters, and in conversations among the brethren THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is warmly commended for presenting to its readers the suggestive title of this page and for other efforts to inspire all disciples and congregations of Christians to work as in the light of our first Centennial.

Our plans contemplate giving to the brotherhood that inspiration from this page that comes from the record of Christian achievements worthy chronicling and appearing here each week. More encouraging and otherwise helpful than tabulated statistics from our secretaries' offices will be the individual triumphs constituting these aggregates, and these we wish to make known to the churches.

A letter from F. H. Symmonds, of Admire, Kan., informs us that a Protestant Methodist minister of that town says, "The Christian Church is doing more than all other churches put together." It is fair to presume he means we are converting more sinners, doing more to unify God's people, to overthrow intemperance, to have the Lord's day hallowed, and to enforce Christian principles and practical righteousness generally than all others. To create and sustain such a reputation as this among the denominationalists will in itself be a magnificent trophy to bear into our Centennial assembly and place at the Master's feet.

To contribute just such unsensational but essential factors as these to achievements that will yet be celebrated in song and in story is the appointed work of Bro. Geo. P. Clark, of Asherville, Kan., who is a fair type of our undistinguished, hardworking, results-producing preachers who are the real hope of our glorious future. Read his Centennial Dawn.

This Department welcomes communications from such men telling of debts paid, church homes dedicated, ingatherings, gifts to our benevolent, educational, and missionary interests, convention resolutions adopted enlarging the field of church operations and all things tending to the enlargement and glory of the Kingdom.

The Centennial Dawn.

BY G. P. CLARK.

With many other Disciples of Christ I am anxiously looking forward to the dawn of the Centennial at Pittsburg. That will be a glad day for the Disciples of Christ when we shall meet together the mightiest organized body on earth, whose leader is Christ the Lord; whose rule of faith and practice is the Word of God; wearing no name but the Master's, and knowing no law but his Word. We are making rapid progress. We are marching into new fields and taking new territory for Christ. Statistical reports show that we are advancing faster than any other religious body. Men and women are reading the Bible for themselves. We are living in an advanced age of the world and from the denominations they are hurrying to the Church of Christ like tributaries flowing into a great river. But whence the secret of this marvelous growth? It is because of the Gospel which we preach and which Paul declared was "The power of God unto salvation to every one who believeth it." Again I call your attention to the final commission. "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel." The Church of Christ is the mightiest missionary society ever launched upon the sea of the centuries. The Foreign Mission propaganda has quickened as nothing else the lagging energies of the church at home. We are accustomed to say as goes the church in America so goes the world. We ought to reverse the proposition and say with Beecher, the quickest route to New York City or any other city is by way of India and China. A knowledge of missions stimulates the home church. Wherever you find a church studying missions, praying for missions, working for missions and giving for missions, there you find a church that Christ has entered to stay and his quickening Spirit gives light and life. But some are sleeping. They have not heeded the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." They have not been heard from with an offering to help spread the Gospel and enlarge the Church of Christ. Brethren, the night is far spent, the day is at hand. Is it not high time to awake out of sleep and "render unto Cesar that which is Cesar's, and unto the Lord that which is the Lord's?" Do not be like a sponge which absorbs all it can and then has to be squeezed for all you get out of it. Do not let a few bear the burden and receive the reward. The missionary church is the growing church. Then fall into line. At the first appearance of light the farmer rises and says it is time to go to work. Learn a lesson from the farmer. The Centennial is dawning upon us. Let us arise in all our strength and might. The harvest is great but the laborers are none too many. Now is the time for the harvest. Because we have fulfilled the conditions and because the "Holy Spirit" has been with us in an amazing manner and because it has always been God's way to give the harvest after the sowing of the seed. Peter sowed on the day of Pentecost and 3.000 golden sheaves were gathered. We have the same seed (the Gospel of Jesus Christ). We have been sowing it for almost a century and have reaped an abundant harvest, and yet the fields are whiter than ever before, and it is ours to carefully sow the seed, and by the time the Centennial shall have fully dawned upon us in 1909, we will have reaped a still greater harvest. I hope to be spared to see that day and that the Lord will use my feeble efforts in greater measure to enlarge his church. God speed the answer to our Savior's prayer when we shall all be one, when the existence of church divisions will be known only in history. "In union there is strength."

Our Centennial Co-Laborers.

Each week I become more and more attached to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.—Hugh Wayt, Barnesville, O.

I want to congratulate you on the fine paper you are giving us. You are on the only tenable ground. Stick to it.—W. H. Bagby, minister, Missoula, Mont.

I hope to be able to place a number of copies of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in our homes, for I believe there are no better pastoral helpers than our good church papers.—David M. Wetzel, minister.

I would like 20 copies of last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I shall be proud to put these into anybody's hands. Better and better with controversy cut out.—L. E. Murray, Indianapolis.

I have been recommending THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for a good many years. I like this spirit. I will be glad to do all that I can to increase its circulation.—Eva Lemert, pastor's assistant, Kansas City, Mo.

I have moved to my daughter's, but I can not live without THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I miss the Editor's "Easy Chair" and get lonely when I can not read the paper. I am 81 years old.—Mrs. I. G. Veach, Albany, Mo.

Please discontinue THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is an advocate of foreign missions, and we soldiers have to go there and risk our lives to protect the missionaries. The paper is unpopular.—F. C. L.—Company C, Fort Mason, Cal.

Allow me to commend your course on the questions now before our brotherhood. May the "Christians only" be the Aquilas and Priscillas of Christian union. The articles, "History of Christian Union," the "Easy Chair" and "The Dome" always appeal to me. Yours for a high ideal.—Flora Pattison, DeLand, Fla.

I appreciate your kindness very much in continuing to send my CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST beyond the subscription period. We have taken the paper twenty-five years. My mother is 81 years old to-day. She is an invalid and never gets to attend church. She greatly enjoys the paper as I read it to her.—Cynthia Longwood.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and other Christian literature is being urged upon the people at every meeting held by us. We believe that one of the mightiest forces now in operation for the salvation of the world is the religious page that enters the homes to enthuse and inspire thousands who for many reasons are deprived of regular church service and informs thousands of others who have no other way of learning THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST development of their Master's cause.—Martin Family.

The Neill Report.

On Monday of last week the President, in pursuance of his promise (or was it a threat?) sent to Congress the text of the report of Messrs. Neill and Reynolds on the condition of the Chicago packing houses, accompanying it with a brief message summarizing the report and presenting his own recommendations, based on it. The substance of it is, as the President says, "That the packing houses are not kept even reasonably clean, and that the method of handling and preparing food products is uncleanly and dangerous to health." The present inspection is fairly adequate, so far as it goes, although the number of inspectors is insufficient, but it does not go far enough. The government inspection under the present law includes the inspection of animals before they are slaughtered, and of carcasses after they are slaughtered. Whether the carcasses condemned after slaughter are actually destroyed in all cases, or whether the packers give the inspectors the slip in some way, as Mr. Sinclair says, and work up the condemned meat in sausage and canned meat, seems rather an open question. The report neither repeats this charge nor denies it. The chief evil is in the handling of the meat from the time it goes into the cooling rooms until it issues from the packing house as a finished product ready for market. The report says: "We saw meat shoveled from filthy wooden floors, piled on tables rarely washed, pushed from room to room in rotten box carts, in all of which processes it was in the way of gathering dirt, splinters, floor filth and the expectoration of tuberculous and other diseased workers." Naturally, the worst abuses are in connection with canned meats and other prepared products. The government inspection, which aims to do no more than insure that the carcasses used in the packing house are free from disease, obviously gives no assurance that these products are prepared in a cleanly way or without admixture of filth and refuse. The only inspection which can give any assurance of safety is, to use the President's words, "inspection from the hoof to the can." The products put up under what Neill and Reynolds describe as filthy and unsanitary conditions, bear this label: "The contents of this package have been inspected according to the act of Congress of March 3, 1891. Quality guaranteed." The implication of this statement is false and misleading. The inspection is not of a sort to guarantee the quality any more than the inspection of a wheatfield would guarantee the quality of the bread made from the flour. Moreover, old cans of meat which have been in stock two years or more are freshened up by heating, relabeled with the certificate of inspection and sold as new goods. Quality still guaranteed, of course.

The Packers' Denial.

Immediately after the publication of the Neill-Reynolds report, eight of the leading packers united in issuing a general denial of the charges made against them. They call attention to the fact that the report does not charge them with using diseased cattle, and that this is the most important question. They assert that the conditions and methods in their houses are as sanitary as it is possible to make them. It is impossible to keep a slaughter house in all respects as neat and attractive as a jeweler's or a milliner's shop. Where animals are killed there are sure to be blood and grease, and it is no job for dress suits or kid gloves. The President's investigators, the packers assert, have overlooked the important fact that grease and blood are not filth, though they may be an unappetizing spectacle to the unaccustomed visitor. They further cite a favorable report recently made by Profs. Burrill and Grindley, of the University of Illinois, who spent two weeks in a thorough examination of the packing houses, and issued a statement that the conditions were as cleanly and sanitary as could be expected. The report of Neill and Reynolds is, however, too detailed and explicit to be waived aside by any such general denials. They saw more than blood and grease. And when two competent witnesses testify to having seen certain things, it is no defense to bring on two other witnesses to testify that they have never seen them.

The New Senator from Kansas.

Senator Burton, of Kansas, sent in his resignation at the last moment, after he had been informed by the committee on privileges and elections that he would be put out if he did not get out. Gov. Hoch has filled the vacancy by appointing A. W. Benson, of Ottawa. F. D. Coburn, who is at present, and has been for many years, secretary of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, was offered the position, but declined because, among other reasons, he is averse to political strife. Mr. Coburn is an unusual type of man for a senator. One peculiarity is that he could have the office without asking for it or having any of his friends ask for it in his behalf. Mr. Coburn is an expert farmer and stock man. He was chief of the live stock department at the St. Louis Exposition and is a leading authority on all practical matters connected with animal husbandry. He is also president of the Kansas State Temperance Union. He has never been in politics and has never tried to get in. No wonder the politicians are surprised at the offer of the appointment, though Mr. Coburn's friends express themselves as not surprised at this or his declining it.

Senator Gorman.

Senator Arthur P. Gorman, who died on Monday, June 4, had been a notable figure in national politics for a quarter of a century. He went to Congress first in 1881, almost at once became a prominent figure, and remained in the Senate continuously until the time of his death, with the exception of a brief interval a few years ago. During much of that time he was the recognized Democratic leader in the Senate. He was a great politician rather than a great statesman. His quarrel with President Cleveland during the latter's second administration deprived him of the approval of a considerable element of the Democratic party, but his control of the party machine in Maryland was sufficient to send him back to the Senate after a brief vacation, and to disappoint the many (including ourselves) who had prematurely congratulated the country on his permanent political downfall. He was more than once a presidential possibility—or a presidential menace. For sheer political astuteness and consummate ability to organize, maintain and utilize a political machine, few men have equalled and still fewer excelled Senator Gorman. He was less successful in commanding the sympathy and support of the best element in his party and of independent citizens outside of his party.

King Alfonso.

The attempt on the lives of King Alfonso and his new queen, as they were returning from the church to the palace immediately after their wedding, was a particularly atrocious bit of anarchism. A score of persons against whom the bomb-thrower had no grudge whatever were killed by the explosion. The king and queen were uninjured, though doubtless considerably disturbed by such an unhappy episode on their wedding day. Alfonso later remarked to Mr. Whitridge, the American envoy to the wedding, as cheerfully as possible under the circumstances, that though he escaped this time, the anarchists will doubtless get him sooner or later, be it next week, next month or next year. Evidently the gayety of the frivolous young monarch is tempered by serious thoughts at times. But why should any one want to kill Alfonso and his young Queen Victoria? Not because he is a tyrannical ruler, for he is not. He has often shown himself a foolish and petulant young man, but it is not of record that he has been unjust or oppressive in his official acts. But he is a king. It is his kinghood, and not his person or his overt acts, at which the bomb was aimed. The anarchist is not fighting for justice and good government, but for an abstract theory of government. In such a cause, a good king makes as fair a target as a bad one. As for Alfonso, we hope his gloomy forecast may fail of fulfillment. He means well and will doubtless do better, now that he is married.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. The Protestant Era: The Period of Reunion.

10. The Latest Step Toward Christian Union.

In the amplification of these historical studies for publication, in permanent form, as it is our purpose to do, we shall hope to give a brief statement of the several irenic movements in the history of the Church since the Reformation of the sixteenth century; but for this series of newspaper articles it has seemed to us sufficient to deal at greater length with those movements which have had most to do in the way of practical results in the direction of Christian union. We come now to the consideration of the very latest of these efforts to give visible and tangible expression to the growing unity of the Church, for the double purpose of utilizing this unity in the service of our common Master, and of promoting a still closer unification of the religious forces of Christendom.

It is evident from what has already been said concerning the growing consciousness of unity and the growing sense of the evils of division, in our Protestant Christendom, that some further step must be taken. The feeling is general that, while all the previous interdenominational movements had served, and were serving, an excellent purpose in promoting a better understanding among Christians, they were nevertheless inadequate expressions of the unity of the Church itself, and that something better must be undertaken. This feeling had been manifesting itself for several years in various tentative co-operative movements, at first locally, and then growing wider in their scope until a national organization was effected. The name given to this form of co-operation among the different religious bodies was termed Federation, to distinguish it from former and less orderly and systematic methods of co-operation. The latter term had long been in use to indicate the working together of the local congregations of any one religious body. Now that a wider movement was to be attempted, involving the co-operation, under certain rules and conditions, and for certain purposes, of the different religious bodies, it was felt that a new term would be necessary to distinguish this new and wider movement from other forms of co-operation, and so the term federation was adopted. Perhaps something in the analogy of the movement with our Federal Union had something to do in suggesting the term. The several states are free and independent within the limitations of their constitutional rights, and yet all own allegiance to a supreme national constitution. The States stand on the basis of equality of rights, each recognizing the other as a state, and entitled to the same rights and liberties which itself enjoys. It was believed that Christian union sentiment had reached a degree of development which made it possible for such a union to be formed among the evangelical Protestant bodies. This very fact has been made an objection to federation by some, on the ground that it involves an indorsement of the errors, in faith and practice, of the religious bodies entering into the federation movement. But let it be noticed that in the Federal Union the States are not equal in wealth, in general intelligence, in their laws, in the enforcement of these laws, in their political sentiments, in population, and in their influence upon the national life. They stand on the plane of equality, however, as to their rights and privileges as free, autonomous States. No more does federation imply that the various co-operating bodies are equal in their intelligent understanding of the Scriptures, in their conformity to the New Testament ideal of the Church, or in their spiritual development. They may, and do, vary greatly in these respects; but since they are one in holding to Christ as their living Head, and in their earnest desire to do his will and promote his glory in the salvation of men, they can agree to recognize each other as Christians—not as perfect Christians; as Christian bodies, not as perfect Scriptural bodies, having equal rights under the law of the land and under the law of God, to be true to their convictions in the worship of God and in efforts to advance his kingdom.

In some of these tentative federation movements in the different States and cities some rules were adopted which were found to be impracticable, and some mistakes have been made, as will always be the case among fallible men even when they are seeking to carry out what they believe to be the will of God. These fragmentary movements, while of value in preparing the way for something better, were not satisfactory. It was believed that something better was practicable, and the great Inter-Church Conference in New York City in November, 1905, was called, in this conviction. It was believed that the time had come when the evangelical Protestant bodies of Christendom should, through representative men chosen for this purpose, deal with this problem of a closer co-operation. In such a gathering, composed of leading men out of the various religious bodies, it was felt there would be such a consensus of judgment as would be able to form a basis of co-operation that would be just to all, that would give perfect freedom to all, and would yet secure such a measure of co-operation as would give a far better expression to the unity which exists to-day than had yet been given by any existing organization or form of co-operation. The delegates in this conference represented, it is estimated, about eighteen million Christians, and its utterances could not fail to profoundly influence the religious thought and life of the times. The addresses delivered revealed a strength of sentiment in favor of Christian union and against the continuation of our extreme denominationalism that surpassed anything which the most ardent friends of Christian union had anticipated. The great theme of the conference was the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers. This sentiment made itself felt in every speech, in every prayer, and in every song.

The critical point, however, as all felt from the beginning, was to form a basis of co-operation that would be acceptable to all the religious bodies represented. It was clear that some things would have to be avoided that had marred the usefulness of other plans of co-operation. In the first place, there must be no attempt to form a doctrinal creed which all would accept. It was evident that our union must be in Christ alone, and that no other creed but him should be suggested. Then, it was clearly self evident that each of the co-operating bodies must be allowed the fullest liberty to carry out what it believes to be its providential mission. Federation, in other words, must not be interpreted as an interference with the free life and development of the co-operating bodies. Any provision of that kind would have been rejected instantly as interfering with the rights of conscience and with the liberty which we have in Christ. Again, it was perfectly manifest that any Council formed under this basis of federation must have no authority, other than purely advisory influence, over the co-operating churches, and that, in the last analysis, each local church, or each religious body through its representatives, must decide whether any given measure recommended by the Council should be carried out. It was believed that if these points were carefully guarded and a simple plan devised for a representative gathering, quadrennially, to consider the interests of the Church universal, to give utterance to its convictions upon the great moral reforms of the day, and to provide for local federations to carry on the work in their respective communities, it would accomplish the end which all had in view. A committee of forty representing all the religious bodies named was appointed to prepare and submit such a basis, and the plan they submitted was adopted with the most remarkable unanimity and enthusiasm.

Some of the conditions which made this step a logical and necessary one, in the present state of religious thought, and indicate its adaption to present day needs, will be considered in later articles.

Limits of Religious Discussion.

Some recent history through which we have passed, and some things which come to our ears, lead us to raise the question, To what extent is it the liberty of an editor, or of any other brother, to oppose the views of another which he believes to be erroneous? This is certainly a very practical question, in view of the fact that these questions of difference are constantly arising, and must arise among a people trained to independence of thinking and to freedom in expressing their thoughts. No one will call in question the right of an editor or of any member of the church to oppose, in any legitimate way, views or doctrines which he believes to be wrong.

But what are the legitimate limitations upon this liberty?

One should, in the first place, state the position which he opposes fairly and ordinarily in the words of those holding it, and should then present, without bitterness, epithet or any purpose to excite prejudice against his brother, the reasons he has to give against the views he deems erroneous. When he has done this he has gone to the extent of his liberty under the law of Christ in opposing what he believes to be error. Anything more than this cometh of evil. Any other motive lying behind a discussion than the desire to promote truth and refute error is a wrong motive. This kind of discussion, conducted with the sole object of getting at the truth, is not objectionable and may prove very profitable. But it requires genuine Christian courtesy, a high sense of what is due to our Christian calling, and of what is fair and just to another, to conduct a discussion in that spirit. There is no truer test of the Christian character and culture of any religious people than the kind of discussions which they carry on among themselves, and with their religious neighbors.

It has come to us from more than one credible source that during the recent discussion of Church Federation a number of preachers have been intimidated into silence or into some expression of opposition to federation by letters threatening newspaper opposition to them on condition of their failure to "fall into line." This seems too incredible for acceptance on ordinary testimony, but the matter is of sufficient gravity to awaken serious reflection and inquiry. We pass no judgment on any preacher who may have yielded to such pressure in the belief that his further usefulness as a minister would be curtailed by the opposition threatened. But we do wish to go on record as expressing our strongest disapprobation of that species of religious persecution which would use one's position or power to coerce the opinions of another servant of Jesus Christ into conformity to his own. If that sort of "Reign of Terror" prevails to any extent among us our claim to be a free people in Christ Jesus would seem to be subject to important modification.

To what extent the evil above mentioned prevails, we are not prepared to say; but the number of personal and confidential letters we have received from brethren whose word we can not doubt, leads us to fear that it is far more prevalent than any of us have dreamed. We are sure of this, however, that a situation exists which calls for the most serious thought on the part of all those who value the liberty which we have in Christ, and who cherish the laudable desire to see the cause we advocate attain to that dignity and power which it is entitled to possess by virtue of its principles and its adaptation to the needs of our time. The "Freedom of the Press" used to be a favorite topic for discussion, and is yet, in some countries, but a far more pressing and practical question among us to-day is the freedom of the ministry.

Notes and Comments.

Herbert Yeuell, who invited the ministers of Winston-Salem, N. C., to co-operate with him in a simultaneous campaign, but whose invitation was declined by the churches who preferred to run rival meetings, writes that his meeting was greatly profited by assuming this union attitude. He held the union meeting, and the good people in various churches co-operated with him, and the others were disarmed by his attitude, so that they could do but little injury. This is the attitude which our evangelists should take on entering a town to hold a meeting. If other churches do not wish to co-operate with them they need not do so, but the evangelist in that case will have the sympathy of the public and will hold a union meeting with such co-operation as he will be sure to secure by this irenic position.

Death is striking just now at some of the writers of our best Christian literature. Cunningham Geikie recently passed away in England at an advanced age. He was the author of a well-known "Life of Christ," and his "Hours With the Bible," had an immense circulation. Dr. Geikie was a regular writer for "The Christian Commonwealth" during Bro. W. T. Moore's editorship. Two other famous Englishmen have just passed away, Dr. Bickersteth, a well-known writer, and Rev. S. Baring-Gould, preacher, novelist and antiquarian, who is best known as the writer of "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

The President's speech, in which he referred to Bunyan's man with the "muck-rake," has given wide publicity to this symbol of the famous dreamer. The President's speech, however, has given a somewhat different turn to the interpretation which Bunyan intended his readers to give it. The man with the "muck-rake" which Bunyan saw in the House of the Interpreter was the man who devoted himself so exclusively to the pursuit of material things—its wealth, its honors, and its fleeting pleasures—that he had no time nor disposition to lift his thought to the contemplation of more important and enduring realities. He is so busy loading himself up with the world's perishable pelf, that he sees not the crown which is held above him, and which could be his by the effort to obtain it. He stands for a large class, even of professed Christians, who are so absorbed in their worldly pleasures as to be in great danger of losing the immortal crown.

A Baptist minister dropped into our office last week to secure a copy of The Christian-Evangelist containing the addresses of President Mullins and Brother Spencer, delivered at the late Indianapolis Congress. He expressed his surprise that the Baptist papers had not published these addresses. We do not know why this was so, but we do know that, although we printed a very large extra edition, the entire edition has been exhausted. We doubt if Baptist editors could have published anything more interesting to their readers than the discussion of this subject by two such able, representative men.

It is really touching, the tender way in which the packing-houses are pleading for the protection of the poor farmers and stock owners against the exposures which the President has authorized to be published relative to packing-house methods. It is a well-known fact that for years these packers have dictated the prices to be paid for live stock; that they have published a high rate for such stock, but before the shippers could get it there, there would be a sudden fall in price, which, of course, the shippers were compelled to take. This sympathy for the farmer is a little belated, and is certain to be discounted in view of the facts just stated. The Government will be sure to find some way of punishing the guilty without doing great damage to the innocent.

Edmund J. James, President of the University of Illinois, is urging the President to send an educational committee to China to "visit the imperial government and, with its consent, each of the provisional governments of the Empire, for the purpose of extending, through the authorities of these provinces, to the young Chinese who may desire to go abroad to study, a formal invitation on the part of our American institutions of learning to avail themselves of the facilities of such institutions." This is urged upon the ground that China is upon the verge of a revolution, and that the nation which educates its young men will do most to influence its future civilization, and will be in more intimate commercial relations with that country. The idea seems to us a good one. If we have any light to shed upon the problems which China has yet to solve, we ought to be willing to do it in the way suggested. All who are in a condition to judge, admit that China is awakening from her long slumber and is to follow Japan in availing herself of the benefits of what the western nations have to furnish. The best thing we can give China is the Gospel, and the next best thing would be to educate the young men who are to be her future leaders in our institutions of learning.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair has been renewing its youth by attending a college commencement. Nothing else can quite so effectually bridge the growing gulf of years between our own graduation day and the present as the witnessing of the exercises of a college commencement. One feels that human life to-day is essentially the same as it was in the long ago. The girls, arrayed in spotless white, look just as sweet now as they did when you and I were in college—with just one exception which each of us would make for himself. The young men are just as handsome and bright as those whom we met in the class-room, in the society hall, and on the college platform, two score years ago. They, both girls and boys, are looking forward to life with the same high hopes and noble aspirations which animated our hearts when we stood on the commencement platform, spoke our pieces, and faced the unknown future. The world has disillusioned us in some things, as it will disillusion them, but the value of their college discipline and associations will increase with the passing years. Whatever regrets may come to them in the future they are never likely to regret their college course and its influence upon their lives and their life-callings. To catch the glowing, optimistic spirit of these college girls and boys, and feel one's self brought into fullest sympathy with them, is to know that, though the head may be gray, the heart is still young. This member of the class of '68 makes his profound bow to all graduating classes of 1906, with the warmest "God bless you!" May your lives measure up to the needs of your day far better than those we have lived whose faces are now turned toward the westering sun.

By the kind invitation of Chancellor W. P. Aylsworth, the Editor of this paper attended the commencement exercises at Cotner University, and delivered the address to the graduating class, and by invitation of the ministerial students, over fifty in number, he also gave them a lecture on their chosen calling. We doubt if we could have found anywhere else a more enthusiastic body of students than we found at Cotner. This institution, as many of our readers know, has had its dark and cloudy days, but thanks to a few men of faith and courage, notably, Chancellor Aylsworth, this splendid building and campus were saved and freed from debt, public confidence restored, and a substantial beginning made toward an endowment. At present the institution has set its heart on a gymnasium, with heating plant, bath rooms, etc., to cost about ten thousand dollars, and the work is to begin as soon as $2,500 cash is in hand. An appeal was made to the students and friends on commencement day for subscriptions for the fund, and over $1,800 was subscribed, amid the college yells of the students and the greatest enthusiasm. Cotner students have no dearth of college spirit, but it finds expression not in lawlessness, but in helping on their alma mater. This was the seventeenth annual commencement of Cotner, and, by common consent, the most successful in its history. It was gratifying to us to find the institution ranking up with the other leading institutions of the state, both in its courses of study and in the character of its work. It is happily located at Bethany Heights, one of the most beautiful suburbs of Lincoln, and the splendid building commands a noble view of the surrounding country, and itself forms a notable object in the landscape for miles around. "Beautiful for situation!" must everyone exclaim, who stands upon the steps of this building and gazes out over the undulating fields which stretch away on every side—a picture of peacefulness and of plenty.

We can not take leave of Cotner without expressing our appreciation of the high character of the work which is being done there. The graduating class receiving the degree of A. B. presented the book of Job as a drama in oriental costume, which was quite impressive and instructive. The most ambitious thing undertaken, however, was the rendition of Henry Vincent's oratorio, "The Prodigal Son," by a splendid quartette and a large chorus, with orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of Mrs. Sutton, the head of the musical department. Mrs. Sutton had adapted this oratorio, in some places, written some of the orchestral accompaniments, arranged others, and had evidently given a large amount of skilled work to the training of the chorus in order to secure the splendid results which delighted the large audience that heard it. As a musical production we have never heard its equal in connection with any of our colleges. If this is a fair specimen of the kind of work done in other departments of the institution, there is very solid ground for the increased prosperity that is coming to Cotner. Among the courses offered in the institution is that of "Pastoral Helpers," in which fifteen young ladies graduated. Two of the graduates in the classical course, Dr. Drummond and wife, sail for India, this fall, as missionaries, while another, we believe, is under appointment. There were six graduates also in the commercial course, and several in the medical school, which is located in the city. The alumni meeting on Wednesday evening listened to a helpful address by Brother Jordan, of Quincy, Ill., an alumnus of the institution. It was a great delight to us to spend a couple of days as a guest in the charming home of Chancellor Aylsworth, whose daughter was a member of the graduting class, and whose son, a former graduate, received along with others the degree of A. M. for studies completed. The meeting of many old friends and the forming of new acquaintances among the students and others, made a pleasant feature of a very pleasant visit.

It was a delightful drive which Chancellor Aylsworth took us one evening after the heat of the day had passed, to the home of W. J. Bryan, perhaps the most distinguished unofficial citizen of the United States to-day. The road led us through a beautiful country, through growing crops, along by clover-scented fields, under a glowing western sky, to "Fairview," the country home of Mr. Bryan. It is located about two miles southeast of Lincoln, and on a knoll which commands a noble view of the surrounding country. The large brick house is said to have cost $40,000, and one of his political opponents has called it "the house that Gab built." Mr. Bryan's "gab," however, seems to suit the American people very well, and "Fairview" is likely to be visited by admiring friends long after his critic has been forgotten. The residence, together with the barn, orchard, windmill and other features of a country home, would attract the attention of any passer-by, as the home of a prosperous farmer. We confess to a great admiration for Nebraska's most distinguished citizen, not so much for his oratorical ability, nor even for his political views, some of which we have not been able to endorse, as for the grandeur of his moral manhood, his courage in standing for what he believes to be right, and the dignity with which he has borne himself in defeat. That kind of man is too much in demand just now for Mr. Bryan to be permitted to enjoy, very long, the quiet of his elegant country home. Chancellor Aylsworth spoke of him as a kind neighbor, with whom he was on friendly terms, and said that were he at home he would give us a hearty welcome. This visit of the Easy Chair to the home of Mr. Bryan was its tribute to his moral greatness and without any pretensions to the gift of prophecy, we venture the prediction that he is yet to fill a large place in American public life and in American history.

By the time this issue of The Christian-Evangelist reaches its readers the hosts of our Missouri Christian workers will be gathering at Hannibal in annual convention. The Easy Chair looks forward with eagerness to these gatherings, as the opportunity for the renewal of fellowship and acquaintanceship with friends old and new. Our Missouri state conventions have, perhaps, been excelled by none in the warmth of their fellowship and in the high enthusiasm which often marks their sessions. It will be a noble company that will gather in Hannibal this week, drawn thither by the bonds of brotherly love, by a deep interest in the cause we plead, and by the desire to promote the kingdom of God in our great state. Let us gather in the spirit of prayer, looking to God for the guidance of his Spirit, and for his direction in all the deliberations of the convention. Let us make it a time for cementing anew the bonds of unity, of reconsecrating ourselves to the great work to which God has called us, and a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The Editor hopes to greet many friends, new and old, in that convention.

To Promote Christian Union

By W. Bayard Craig

One of the themes discussed at the Congress of the Disciples was "Practical Measures for the Disciples in the Promotion of Christian Union To-Day." Two papers were read; we conclude herewith one of them, by W. Bayard Craig, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Denver, Colo., the first part of which was published last week.

Phariseeism made Calvinism a sectarian barrier and poisoned with its selfishness the very springs of redemption; it makes a particular form of church government a sectarian wall, destroying the unity of the Church for which Christ prayed; it makes the Lord's supper a monument of sectarian narrowness and a wall of separation; it makes baptism in water, a mere outward symbol of the baptism of the Spirit, the only satisfactory sign of a Christian life and any unintentional inperfection in the rite an invincible barrier to Christian fellowship. Well might the Master say, "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees." Phariseeism is the arch enemy of spiritual religion through all the ages. It is the chief cause of divisions in the Church. It is the chief enemy in the road to Christian union. It is all that keeps the Baptists and Disciples apart. Any measure that will remedy formalism and Phariseeism in the churches will render the greatest possible aid in the promotion of Christian union.

3. Get rid of arrogance. A lack of humility and teachableness; too much satisfaction with self; arrogance; these are Pharisaic traits of character. We have so much in our plea and in our history to make us exultant, that we are in danger of sinning in the matter of pride and self righteousness. Not often in a convention is a voice raised in criticism of our position or our spirit. Suffer a few words in the way of depreciation. If true, we can not too promptly consider how we may strengthen the weak places; if not true, the proper punishment will no doubt reach the offender.

Take as an instance of our imperfection the matter of church government. We boast of our religious liberty under a New Testament form of government. No bishops for us, yet somehow we have missed an advantage enjoyed by the early Church in having a superintendency exercised by their best qualified men. Doubtless a superintendency of able men in any organization is based on natural law. Nature's laws can not be evaded without penalty. They are God's laws. The demands of the law among us have been answered in an irregular way, by the development of the newspaper bishop, self-appointed, with usurped power and possibly nothing more than a commercial interest in the great paper whose policy he controls; conceivably not a church member at all, and so without conscience as to the methods employed to win the support of the ignorant and unspiritual, the newspaper bishop may, nevertheless, while his power lasts, by the tremendous power of the press in our day, direct and control the life and development of our movement.

Is this ideal? Is this God's plan? Have we no need of study or conference concerning forms of church government? Can we without hesitation invite the vast hosts of Christendom to unite with us on the platform of church government we have constructed? More than twenty years ago Isaac Errett, of glorious memory, said in a conversation concerning Christian union, always so dear to him, "I would yield in the matter of church government for the sake of Christian union."

Much of our best missionary work is carried on not by the church in any formal way, but by volunteer societies. Is that normal? Is that truly Scriptural?

I know a congregation that recently expelled a number of prominent members, not for any immorality. They were simply in opposition to the majority and were driven out. The outcasts had no court of appeal to review the case and save them from possible injustice. Has the ideal church government no machinery by which the rights of the individual can be protected?

Are our prayer-meetings so much better than the meetings of our religious neighbors that we have ground for pride? In the matter of fidelity to Christian duty, generous giving to Christian activities, blamelessness of life, fidelity to Christian ideals, are we so much better than our religious neighbors that we can afford to assume the self complacent, altitudinous, "better-than-thou" air that marks much of our preaching and writing? Is our scholarship so pre-eminent, our place in the national literature so prominent, our influence in the religious thought so paramount, that in the face of the vast and vital interests involved in Christian union we are justified in standing aloof? Are we justified in assuming that we have nothing to learn, nothing to concede, nothing for conference in the presence of this world-wide question of Christian union? Surely only rank ignorance and provincialism could assume that position. We have good cause to glory in our plea and our people, but we are not perfect. We must still maintain the teachable disposition. It is a practical measure that will do much to promote Christian union if we can somehow manage to abate our arrogance or if that is too strong a term, let us say, manage to develop a genuine Christian humility.

No army can hope to wage a victorious campaign that fails to bestow much care on preliminary training and equipment; for that reason we have emphasized, in this paper as a practical measure of prime importance, the education of our own people in the appreciation of spiritual values and in the dangers of formalism, Phariseeism and arrogance. A part of our large army is already trained and equipped. They are ready to move to the front to advance the cause of Christian union. We have talked union. It is the time now for deeds, for demonstration. Let those who are ready move forward.

Church federation is not Christian union, but is a step in the right direction. Calvinism is practically eliminated as a bar to Christian fellowship. Theories of the atonement, theories of conversion, forms of government are all abandoned as tests of Christian character. Denominational names and symbols are lightly held. All banners are lowered in the presence of the royal standard of our great King. There is throughout Protestant Christendom a cry from the deeps of spiritual life, "O, Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do?"

Federation is a reasonable, logical, next step forward. Union meetings, interdenominational courtesy, interdenominational co-operation we have long enjoyed in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association and in the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. The proposed scheme of federation simply seeks to express the comity already existing in some formal way. The scheme as outlined is tentative and subject to change as experience may suggest. It aims to secure to each federated religious body its own distinct individuality, its own creed, government and worship, with every power, jurisdiction, and right previously possessed. It simply provides for a formal conference of delegates from the federated bodies, that they may consult and advise in matters of common interest. One object in view is to prevent avoidable waste of money and men in missionary and evangelistic work. This is the point that has excited opposition in our ranks. The trouble is imaginary and, if real, would benefit us from a selfish point of view more than it would injure, because we are so strong and well established in the country towns and in the growing west. It implies fraternal courtesy in dealing with religious brethren, but as Christians we are already under obligation to do that. Others will discuss the details of the scheme. This paper has room only for a general view of the situation. A religious body composed of independent congregations, with no representative convention having dictatorial ecclesiastical authority, can not pronounce for or against federation. It can not compel congregations to go into the federation who are not ready for it or hinder those that are.

A Disciple of Christ is baptized into fellowship with the Father, Son and Holy Spirit and assumes obligation of fellowship with all other Christians throughout the wide world. To confine his fellowship within one particular religious body is sectarianism. To recognize the universal fellowship is Christian.

As we have already done in the Endeavor movement, individual congregations will decide as they please, for or against the proposed federation. No one except the non-accountable editor-bishop and his clacquers will attempt to interfere with

Some of My Likings---1. Why I Like America

By William Durban

Being once more in this country it may be well in place for me to indicate some of the reasons for my attachment to it, and for the pleasure I experience in visiting it whenever the opportunity recurs. In my next communication I will state, on the other hand, why I like England, my native land. And I will speak impartially, though both these articles are to be written purely from a Britisher's point of view.

The Land of Independence.

I have made a curious discovery. For I have found that independence is altogether different from liberty. I was perplexed when a noted and very able American, staying a long time in England, said to me, "There is far more of real liberty in England than in America." But on my first visit to America I soon came to understand what he had meant. I will explain as to this distinction when writing the next article. For the moment I will dwell on my admiration for the real quality of independence which peculiarly characterizes the American character. I have everywhere in this land found the people unshackled from the dead past, excepting in one curious direction, which I will specify presently. All the populations of the Old World are heavily fettered by archaic prejudices, by paralyzing anachronisms, and by the heritage of rusty superstitions. From these hereditary burdens the American is free. I was at first, when I came across some years since, startled at the many differences that at once forced themselves on me. In Europe we go on through succeeding generations using the same species of appliances in all the arts of common life which were employed by our ancestors. The bolts, locks, keys, fastenings of windows, types of buildings, and countless other things remain stereotyped. But in America the past counts for nothing in respect to the conveniences of practical life. Britons, Frenchmen, Germans, Italians, Spaniards, Greeks, Turks and Russians are all alike thus crystallized in antiquated feudalisms. The American is the world's iconoclast civilizer. That is one reason why I like America. It is true that in traveling in all parts of Europe I have found myself in each old country fascinated by the differentiations of history all alive before my eyes. The past springs up in its wonderful reproductions in the various persistently sustained customs of the many nationalities. We see what went on a thousand years ago, for it goes on much the same style to-day in many European lands. In America all is fresh, newly contrived, just suited to the exigence of the moment, without any slavish reference to what our grandmothers cared about. False reverence is gone, and there is all the more room for reverence of truth as it presents itself to the open mind.

The Exception.

It is singular indeed that just only in reference to religion is the exception conspicuous. I find that in America there is an extraordinary tenacity of doctrinal feeling such as can scarcely be matched in my own old country, notwithstanding our foolish clinging over there to an effete erastianism, in shape of the Established Church. You Americans wisely disestablished the State Church early in the history of the great republic. But the proceeding was not unique, for all our British colonies have done so in turn, and the State Church amounts to very little in Wales and Scotland, and in my own early time it vanished from Ireland. Leaving out of sight the slavery of the Church to the secular power, and bearing in mind the wonderful vigor and vitality of the great free churches of nonconformity, I am inclined to think that there is less of theological freedom of opinion in the United States than in the United Kingdom. But I consider that there is even here something to be said in favor of America. The fact I am adducing proves that a wise and steady conservatism is not wanting in the new country. It proves that the Americans are not random destructionists. I have thought sometimes that in England we compensate too much for ecclesiastical bondage to an establishment by extreme theological license even within the establishment. There is very little respect paid by the Angelican clergy to their ordination vows.

Elimination of Caste.

In all old civilizations the servility of social class distinctions is incorrigible and incurable. America is as free from this curse as human nature will allow a nation to become. Cliques and sections there must be. Fashion, wealth, pride, power have their inevitable effect even in a new commonwealth. As Dr. Lyman Abbott said to me, "Here in America we are witnessing the rise of an industrial aristocracy in a political democracy." But you can never be afflicted with the incubus of any permanent plutocracy or aristocracy of any kind, to spurn and despise the proletariat, for a very simple and very excellent reason. You have no feudal law of primogeniture, piling wealth and property on the eldest son in each successive generation, with lordly titles. If your daughters wish to become duchesses they must buy a foreign ducal coronet. I like America because it recognizes no artificial hereditary nobility, but confers honor on the individual worthy of it, and because the affluence of its millionaires is quickly distributed instead of being congested amongst a small and pampered caste.

The Country of Constructiveness

This is the land of colossal materialization. It is the land beyond all others of the architect, the engineer, the builder, the practical geometer, and the inventor. Therefore, it is the proper sphere for young people of ability and ambition. You appear to kill off your wastrels (mainly imported, I know) with extraordinary expedition, for the climate and the infernal intoxicants do not rid a roue' in emulating Methuselah. But I do rejoice in the scope given in this vast republic to the aspiring youngster. The constructive genius of this people is refreshing to notice. Some people, however, imagine that America is in peril through a tendency to excessive materialism. That is, I have marked, the criticism of some of the Americans themselves. I do not think so. For it is surely self-evident that the gigantic material advance is the result of close and profound thought. A nation capable of magnificent achievements in the way of invention must first be capable of formulating intricate theories in all directions. Often have I been amazed at the evidence of deep research and intense thought necessary to produce some wonderful triumph of novel invention in this country. I like America because it is the home of the most thoughtful as well as the most practical people on earth.

The Laboratory of Reform.

The American people are justified in their claim that they are the greatest sociological reformers the world has ever seen. Of course I am not blind to the developments that seem to point in the wrong direction. But with these I am little concerned as a critical student, because they are surely but the mere passing excrescences that might be expected, having their analogies in all great communities. The almost miraculous progress of the temperance reformation is to my mind the chief glory of this people. I like America because, however many even of her own people may scoff at this, she has proved that prohibition, the most diabolical of all national curses, is a possibility. I am sorry that many thoughtless people on this side decline to give their own great country the honor due to her in this respect. I would glorify Columbia all the more. This is a land of the noblest ideals ever set up in the history of the world. The blemishes on the escutcheon are easily to be erased, and they are hardly perceptible in the blaze of this record. The drawbacks and defects in American conditions are largely due to foreign contributions to the life of the great republic. Much is written in the American papers of the colossal corruption in public life. That seems to disturb many thoughtful minds. It does not surprise a thoughtful and studious Englishman. In the days of Queen Anne and the Georges, the days of Walpole and Pitt, of Bolingbroke and Marlborough, England was an appalling sink of political and municipal corruption. Immortality in high places and atheism amongst all classes would have destroyed the nation but for the mercy in Providence which raised up Wesley, Whitefield, Toplady and Rowland Hill, to save the land. Parliament was made up largely of members representing "rotten boroughs" and "pocket boroughs," who made the constitution a farce. America is a young country, passing through the critical period of conformation. It is the land of the morning dawn of a new and transfiguring civilization. Hail Columbia!

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

What interesting pages these are of the Fifth Gospel! How beautifully has the great Teacher woven the details and peculiarities of the varied landscape into the texture of his parables! How we may read page after page, torn and soiled it may be, but legible, of this great story, and how the land bears testimony to the truth of the Book! We turned from the sea, sleeping quietly there in the sunlight 682 feet below the Mediterranean, its blue waters, and little bays of exquisite beauty and beaches with their myriads of minute shells, its lights and shadows ever-varying on its surface and surrounding hills, and its one great memory lingering over all. We passed the Horns of Hattin, crossed the long plain, lingering a little while in Cana and Nazareth, and then, along the plain of Esdraelon and around the foot of Carmel, found our way back to the good ship. A few hours, and on the morning of the Lord's day, March 11, we landed at Joppa. Here is a city of 35,000, noted for its oranges, of which it ships 8,000,000 yearly. This is the most interesting landing we have seen, and in stormy weather is attended by great danger. Here Hiram, King of Tyre, brought the cedars of Leanon for the Temple, and Jonah took ship which resulted in "the first ocean male carrier and the first free delivery." It is the City of Dorcas, and of Simon the tanner, whose memories linger here—the tomb of the good woman and the house where Peter caught the great vision being shown us. Dean Stanley and other authorities think there is little doubt of the identity of the house of Simon. It is said that often Jews and Russian pilgrims when they land here fall on their knees and kiss the earth. We saw bands of these Russians. Over 15,000 pilgrims from all nations land here every year. The market place and principal streets show a polyglot and polychromatic aggregation. It was good to get away from the crowd and find the shores of the Mediterranean and gather its beautiful shells, thousands of which may be seen on the beach. In the evening we attended an English service. About eight persons were present besides our little party. There was no sermon. The clergyman prayed for Edward VII, the German Emperor, the President of the United States, and the Sultan, and at the close passed out without a word of greeting to the little group of American pilgrims who were homesick for even so much as a handshake. We wouldn't do that.

The journey from Jaffa, or Joppa, to Jerusalem, is over the plain of Sharon and through the hill country of Judea known as desert. First the train stops at Lydda, mentioned in Chronicles and Ezra and Nehemiah, and in the New Testament as the place where Peter healed Aeneas. The plain is not so fertile as Esdraelon, but it abounds in gardens, meadows, grain fields and groves set with olives, oranges, pomegranates and figs, and lavishly decorated with flowers. Ramleh, the Arimathea of New Testament times, is passed, then Ekron on the northern border of Philistia, Gezer, Bethshemish, Zorah, birthplace of Samson, and farther on Samson's cavern is shown among the rocks. Bittir is the last stopping place and is among the wild rough desert country, and near by they point out the spot where Philip baptized the Eunuch. "How do you know?" I asked. "Because he was going south toward Gaza, and that is the only water on the way." I recalled a story Garfield used to tell about one of our literalists in the early times who used to say: "This was a certain water, brethren. Luke calls it a certain water. It was no uncertain water."

After fifty-four miles' ride, which requires four hours, the Holy City is called, and we enter by the Jaffa gate, and rest in sight of the Mount of Olives and the Mosque of Omar and Church of the Holy Sepulchre, and my first vision of the holy places is under the soft radiance of the moon as I stand on the balcony of the hotel near enough to the Pool of Hezekiah to toss a stone into it, and look toward the Temple.

How much it means to be in the city of the great King! Long, long ago Abraham met Melchizedek, king of Salem, who ruled here. Then in the times of the judges we hear of Jebus from which no doubt we get the present name. It was David's capital and Solomon's, then destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, rebuilt by Nehemiah, brought under Rome, laid waste by Titus, subjected to sixteen different sieges that have destroyed it until the Jerusalem of today is the eighth city, built on the ruins of seven predecessors. For more than fifty years after the siege of Titus it was a barren waste, without a single inhabitant, and then it became under Rome a heathen city, with a Temple to Jupiter where stood the temple of Herod. Constantine restored the city. In 637 it passed under Moslem dominion, and except during the time of the Crusader occupation, about a century, it has remained as we see it, Mahometan, though of its population there are but 7,000 Moslems, while 41,000 are Jews and 13,000 Christians.

The city has eleven gates, though five are closed. David and Damascus streets, crossing at right angles, mark the various quarters. Entering at the Jaffa gate on the west, where I have my home here, with the ancient tower of David on the right, used for a Turkish barrack, one walks straight east on on David street to the Temple area. To the right is the Armenian quarter, and the left the Christian; the Mahometan is to the northwest, and the Jewish south. Many new buildings we see outside the wall and a great deal of new work going forward. Mt. Zion and Mt. Moriah are the hills on which the city is built, 2,500 and 2,600 feet above sea level. This morning on the backs of sure-footed little donkeys we made the circuit of the walls. Starting from the Jaffa gate at which Nehemiah went forth to behold the destruction of the walls, and going southward along the Bethlehem road, then for two and a half miles back to our starting place. The city is wonderfully picturesque, not the Jerusalem of our dreams, but an intensely interesting city nevertheless. Within it has all the unsightly features of an Oriental town, narrow streets in which there is no distinction of roadway for beasts of burden and human beings, but men and women are jostled and crowded by asses and camels, and everywhere is the vision of dirt and squalor and wretchedness. Some feel they do not care for the Jerusalem of to-day, so different is it from their ideal. Mr. Spurgeon could never visit the Holy Land, and a distinguished minister of Washington said to

BUILDING FOOD

To Bring the Babies Around.

When a little human machine (or a large one) goes wrong, nothing is so important as the selection of food to bring it around again.

"My little baby boy fifteen months old had pneumonia, then came brain fever, and no sooner had he got over these than he began to cut teeth and, being so weak, he was frequently thrown into convulsions," says a Colorado mother.

"I decided a change might help, so took him to Kansas City for a visit. When we got there he was so very weak when he would cry he would sink away and seemed like he would die.

"When I reached my sister's home she said immediately that we must feed him Grape-Nuts and, although I had never used the food, we got some and for a few days gave him just the juice of Grape-Nuts and milk. He got stronger so quickly we were soon feeding him the Grape-Nuts itself and in a wonderfully short time he fattened right up and became strong and well.

"That showed me something worth knowing and, when later on my girl came, I raised her on Grape-Nuts and she is a strong healthy baby and has been. You will see from the little photograph I send you what a strong, chubby youngster the boy is now, but he didn't look anything like that before we found this nourishing food. Grape-Nuts nourished him back to strength when he was so weak he couldn't keep any other food on his stomach." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

All children can be built to a more sturdy and healthy condition upon Grape-Nuts and cream. The food contains the elements nature demands, from which to make the soft gray filling in the nerve centres and brain. A well fed brain and strong, sturdy nerves absolutely insure a healthy body.

Look in pkgs. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

me: "I would rather spend the time on my farm." I do not feel so. This is the spot. These are the hills. These are the ways trod by the Lord's feet. "Jerusalem is builded as a city that is compact together." At the time of Christ its walls were over four miles in extent, now they are two miles and a half. "Walk about Zion and go 'round about her," was the exhortation. One can not help recalling, as he contemplates the city of to-day, and contrasts it with Jerusalem the golden, the words: "How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people! How is she become as a widow! She that was great among the nations!" But even in her ruins Jerusalem is a city of mighty memories, a city which touches the hearts and imaginations of men, a city which has vast power over the nations. It is a city of many races and religions, a city which speaks forty languages, yet, while a city of 60,000, is without a book store or a newspaper. A city full of religious institutions, charities and hospitals, yet with little of the spirit of pure religion, with filth and poverty unspeakable, and with quarrelsome sects and senseless superstitions, and lying and dishonesty reduced to fine arts. The English have missions here, but there is no American society operating. American Quakers have a work at Ramleh, near by. There are Greek, Roman and Armenian priests at every corner, but they seem, as a rule, lazy fellows. No doubt the Moslem government has much to do with the social and religious conditions. Here even where the Temple of Solomon stood rests the Mosque of Omar and it is but a little time since no Christian could enter the Temple area save at the risk of his life. When Dean Stanley visited the city he could only view this situation from the Mount of Olives.

Our first walk was to the Mosque of Omar. We were guarded all through by a Turkish soldier. Here is the famous rock covered by the dome of the Mosque, which has so puzzled antiquarians, whether it is the rock on which Abraham bound Isaac for sacrifice, or the threshing floor of Ornan where the plague was stayed. No one doubts the identity of the Temple area. No one doubts it was substantially in the days of Christ as it is now. All this ground was familiar to the eyes and to the feet of our divine Lord. Here he stood and cried: "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." Here was the spot on the night when the army of Titus burst into the city, that a soldier threw a torch into the Temple, and captured city and encircling hills and the sky itself were illumined by the mighty conflagration.

The Mosque, or "Dome of the Rock," is said to be the finest building in Asia, and by some is declared to be the most beautiful structure in existence. It is octagonal, each side 66½ feet wide, and glitters with richly colored marbles and tiles, while its dome is the very perfection of proportion. It was in part the work of the Moslems before the Crusades and enlarged by the Crusaders, but put in its present form by Sulieman, the Magnificent, in 1561. The marble mosaics, magnificent rugs, stained glass windows and general-architectural effects make it a masterpiece of beauty. That exquisitely graceful and beautiful dome, 115 feet high, is the chief landmark of Jerusalem. The main feature is the rock under the dome which marks the site of the great altar of burnt offering. The rock measures 57 by 43 feet. Traces of conduits which carried off the blood are plainly seen. Moslems guard it and allow no one to touch it. They believe Mahomet made his last prayer on this rock, and when he went up to heaven the rock started to follow and was kept back by Gabriel, whose finger marks are shown? They say the rock is still suspended in the air, and Mahomet drove certain nails into it, which gradually work through the stone and fall into a cavern below. When all the nails work through then the end of the world shall come. Only two and a half they showed us as left. People who throw backsheesh on these go to heaven; others elsewhere. I threw on them some copper coin, which they said was "no good!"

The Elderburg Association

CHAPTER V.

"Sometimes," said Brother Lawyer, when he came to review Brother Schoolmaster, "in the creation of a florid, freckled man the createe is endowed with a sense of humor; but sometimes, as in the case of the brother who has just spoken, the endowment is wanting. We, in our poor, weak judgments, seeing things as through a glass, darkly, are sometimes tempted to deplore the omission; but we can not supply it. Where a man has been thus strangely dealt with, he is thrice fortunate if he have the wisdom to go on from experiment to experiment until he finds a niche in life where he can rest secure, taking himself as seriously as he thinks the facts in his case will warrant. For such a man the office of schoolmaster must be a blessed haven, a shelter in a time of storm, second only, in point of comfort and security, to the office of drill-sergeant in the regular army.

"To me it has been given to solve one of the great mysteries of time: I know why there have been so few great reformers in the world. You may count on your fingers the really great, epoch-making men who have been seen on the earth since the death of Paul. The fact is not to be regarded as accidental. Since every great reformer must of necessity be a great martyr, we perceive a deliberate mercy in the scarcity of such men from age to age.

"The great reformer is necessarily an abnormal man—a man abnormally developed in certain qualities, and, therefore, by nature's great law of compensation, abnormally deficient in other qualities. Unusual ability to discern truth and falsehood; remarkable capacity for indignation; courage, moral and physical, that is almost superhuman: and correlated with these, certain defects, as lack of discretion, or what we call sound judgment.

"Had Luther been what we call a discreet man—a smooth, politic man, is it conceivable that he would have stirred up that mediaeval nest of black-bodied hornets then hanging on the European bough—observing how many there were of them and how few there seemed to be of him?

"If Knox, Wesley, Campbell, had been what we call discreet men—diplomatic men; if each of them had not been above the normal in discernment, courage, zeal, and below the normal in practical, worldly wisdom, should we know anything about them now?

"Each of these great men suffered martyrdom in his day. Not the martyrdom of fire and faggot, rack and thumbscrew, certainly, but of that crucifixion of the soul which only they can suffer, who, able to discern great truths and great falsehoods, can not find rest in their souls until they have exalted the one and cast down the other. Theirs is the torture of the high motive maligned, and of the high purpose thwarted, by the cowardly, the ignorant, and the self-seeking. I am persuaded that the infrequency of great reform movements is due to the unwillingness of the Master to call men to martyrdom until conditions arise when there is no other remedy.

"Yet there is good reason to believe that in every age there are always, ready to hand, men available, on short notice, for the very highest purposes of reform. Such men have the needful vision for the discernment of great truths and errors, together with the necessary poverty of common sense (or the necessary riches of uncommon sense) that must go to the equipment of moral leaders. They are a sort of moral militia, the Lord's reserves, liable to be called out in great emergencies. Brother Schoolmaster is perhaps one of them. Unfortunately, their souls within them grow nervous from long waiting, so that, while listening for the large, rich trumpet of the great occasion, they are too apt to respond to the thin, tin fife of the small occasion. Place one of them before a mighty evil, front to front, and you have a hero and reformer; confront him with, say, the small, petty, irritating faults, such as we find in the average congregation, and you have a 'nagger' and a common scold. In the one case you may look for a martyrdom; in the other you may expect a case of nervous prostration. In the first case the man may become a center of a moral whirlwind which, perhaps, he can ride and control; in the second, he is a center of a tempest-in-a-teapot which will perhaps blow him into another bishopric five hundred miles away.

"This witness had discernment to perceive that many things were out of joint in the places where he preached. I think we may accept the statement that things were wrong at Somnolency Gap, as regards the song service. Also some improvement might have been made in the communion service at Quietude. None of us can doubt for one moment that the dog nuisance at Peaceful Ridge should have been abated. But think of Brother Schoolmaster's frantic, ill-timed, and ill-judged assaults on those people. Dragging all their poor, antiquated, threadbare customs out into the light, and publicly airing them before sinners and visitors from other congregations! What a pity! Pity that a man in this practical age should be as a babe in the adjustment of means to ends. That a man should be a descendant of Kentucky pioneers and yet unable to perceive that the nature of the game should determine the choice of ammunition! It may have occurred to David's friends that the pebbles he chose for his sling were rather light ammunition for hunting giants; but for the procuring of snow-birds for a pot-pie they would have been altogether too large. King Arthur's brand, Excalibur, was undoubtedly the right medicine for heathen Danes and Saxons; but for ridding the Queen's bower of mice, a mouse trap had been the better weapon.

"I am inclined to believe that Brother Schoolmaster belongs to the Lord's reserves, subject to sudden call on some great day when hero-martyrs are needed. Meanwhile, until the hour of destiny strikes, let him find congenial and useful work where he is now employed."

To Promote Christian Union.

this liberty. If our general convention would attempt to do so we would have crossed the line that separates Christian liberty from religious sectarianism and there would be a revolt on the part of those who remained true to our ideals.

The spiritually minded have the liberty to do as our ministers in Kansas City have already done, pronounce for the wider Christian fellowship. This independent action will go on until we have a large and influential part of our forces in active and helpful relationship to Christian union efforts. As in the past so will it be in the future, as the matter is more fully understood, as the timid become assured that federation and kindred movements mean not an abandonment of a single iota of truth in our plea, but the more effective proclamation of its principles; not a loosening of allegiance to Christ, but a more profound devotion to his teachings, they will follow on until we will be so largely represented that we can creditably do the work implied by our plea and our opportunity. Let those who are ready go to the front.

The spiritually minded owe it to themselves and to the brotherhood to take an active and influential part in the movement toward Christian union. Certain conditions must be secured. We must have full and unrestricted freedom to preach the Gospel as we understand it. We can not permit anything to interfere with the training and maintenance of a good conscience. We must have liberty to preach all the truth concerning baptism as well as faith and repentance. All these conditions we can secure and then push forward our work in an atmosphere of mutual respect and esteem better than in an atmosphere of suspicion and distrust. We need influential men in the federation councils to see that our liberties are preserved. We can have great influence within the federation councils, we could expect nothing but misunderstanding, misrepresentation and contempt if we refuse to enter and antagonize the divine purpose in view. Let us demonstrate that we are Christian union to the core by seizing every opportunity in convention, in union meetings, by press, by pulpit, by unfailing fraternal courtesy on the right hand and on the left, to bring about an effective, fraternal, co-operation among all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth.

The Disciple, who loves all who love the Lord, whether his feelings of good fellowship is returned or not; who yearns for the practical union of all Christians in the work of salvation; who has caught the contagion of Christ's love for humanity; who bases Christian fellowship in Christian character rather than in ritualistic conformity, may bring upon himself the scorn of the formalist, but he will have for his comforting support both the spirit and the letter of the New Testament, the consciousness that he is in line with the progress of events in the unfolding life of Christianity, that he is in harmony with the loving purpose of our Lord. That ought to be enough to satisfy the heart of any mortal. In the joyous consciousness of a divine mission such a man will pray for Christian union, will work by teaching and education to make his brethren ready for Christian union, and will so far as in him lies demonstrate to-day the feasibility of church federaton as a preparatory measure.

Weak Churches.

By J. G. Waggoner.

Churches which consider themselves weak are usually so, from three conditions, viz: poor leadership, fewness of numbers, or poverty. The first difficulty is by far the most frequent and serious. Self-seeking, partisan spirit, glory rather than service, and other types of inefficiency are among the many causes. Christ is our leader, to please him and serve him well, is the true purpose of every child of God. If this spirit could rule a child could lead them. A leader is often that, or nothing. A man who has tried to lead and has not succeeded to the satisfaction of his brethren is in best position to show the rest of the church how to be a good follower and helper. If the church has elders they should plan the leading and select leaders. A man appointed to lead a service ought to know it at least a week beforehand, so that by prayer and steady and planning he might have an edifying program. The Disciples meet on the first day of the week to break bread. To do this is motive enough. But accompanying this there used to be singing, prayers, exhortations and preaching. This ought to be planned for. When no one is able to preach a sermon some one, a good reader, man, boy, woman or girl, could be selected to read a sermon, not on the spur of the moment in a bungling way, but by a week's study and private reading be ready on the Lord's day to read the sermon intelligently. The services should not be too long. I believe any congregation can have such a service as this greatly to the edifying and strength of the little church. If the congregation has no elders a committee on services should be appointed, and sometimes it would be a good thing where there are elders. The Sunday-school should carefully train and bring up the children and teach all who will come the Word of the Lord. This brings us naturally to consider the second condition, the fewness of numbers. Would not such a service as is indicated above finally attract friends? Then the Sunday-schools would raise up accessible material. But no church is doing its duty that does not in a still more direct way preach the Gospel. It is the power of God unto salvation. So a regular preacher must be arranged for or an evangelist, at least, to hold a meeting and gather in the new material that will add scope and variety to the program after he is gone. Until the church is large enough to have regular preaching, its life and growth can in this way be maintained. This leads to

DOCTOR EXPLAINS

His Article in the Medical Magazine About Coffee.

One of the most famous medical publications in the United States is the "Alkaloidal Clinic," in a recent number of which an entertaining article on coffee by a progressive physician and surgeon was published. In explaining his position in the matter this physician recently said:

"In the article in question I really touched but lightly upon the merits of Postum Food Coffee. I have had several cases of heart trouble, indigestion and nervousness where a permanent cure was effected by merely using Postum in place of coffee without any other treatment.

"In my own family I have used Postum for three years and my children actually cry for it and will not be satisfied with any other beverage. Indeed, they refuse to eat until they have had the customary cup of Postum and as it is a rebuilder and does nothing but good I am only too glad to let them have it.

"To get the best results we boil th Postum at least 20 minutes and it is then settled by adding a little cold water, then the addition of fresh cream makes a beverage I now prefer to the very best coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Authorities are agreed that Postum is a wonderfully quick and sure rebuilder. Ten days' trial in place of coffee proves it.

Our Budget

—This is our last call for the Missouri State Convention at Hannibal, June 15-20. Let us have an old-fashioned Missouri convention, full of good fellowship and religious enthusiasm. Come early and stay late. Let us plan for larger things in Missouri. Let every church in every part of the state be represented. The object of the convention is to dominate "Imperial Missouri" with the primitive Gospel. Go up to Hannibal in that faith. Help Brother Abbott to complete his permanent fund with that end in view.

—Remember this is a union convention in which every one of our interests are represented.

—If you can not take in the entire convention plan to be present at a few of its sessions, at least.

—If the Bible schools, generally, do as well in their Children's Day offerings as the few from which we have heard, a great offering for foreign missions will appear when all the returns are in. Send to F. M. Rains, Secretary, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

—J. H. Mohorter preached at the Union Avenue Christian Church Sunday morning last, while the pastor, Dr. J. H. Philputt, was delivering the baccalaureate sermon at Eureka College. Brother Mohorter's children have arrived in St. Louis.

—The Texas brethren are in convention this week at Waxahachie, and The Christian-Evangelist is represented there by our superintendent, George L. Snively.

—F. E. Day reports happiness and prosperity in his new work at Nelson, Neb., where he has been just one month.

—C. B. Titus and wife will sail in a few days for China. They have been at home on furlough for about a year.

—John Lord, of Wolfville, N. S., has been appointed to go to the Philippines. He will serve there as an evangelist.

—R. Ray Eldred and family, of Africa, are at home on furlough. He has visited a number of churches and has spoken at the Indiana State Convention.

—N. M. Walker, of St. Elmo, Ill., desires to give all his time to evangelistic work, and is willing to go to out of the way and needy places in which to do it.

—F. Douglas Wharton and wife have been at work at Watonga, Oklahoma, one month. They are seeking to pave the way for a revival meeting to be held at no distant date.

LEVI MARSHALL,

Pastor of the Christian Church, Hannibal, Mo., which will entertain the State Convention.

—L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., will dedicate a new church at Elmira, N. Y., on June 24. He will remain during the week following the dedication to attend a missionary convention.

—Mis Ella Ewing, of Eureka, Ill., has been appointed a missionary to Africa. She will work among the women and children at Bolengi. Miss Ewing is a graduate of Eureka College.

—B. F. Taylor, Devine, Texas, desires to leave the south and come to one of the northern states for work. Brethren, both in the north and south, commend him as a man of good ability and character.

—The regular attendance at our services in Missoula, Mont., since W. H. Bagby entered upon the pastorate, is said to be 50 per cent better than ever before in the history of the church.

—Isaac Elder, Hamburg, Iowa, is looking for a good evangelist to hold a meeting in that town immediately following a union meeting which will begin about Oct. 15. Write him concerning the matter.

—The church in Scranton, Pa., vacated some months ago by Robert L. Clymer, is still without a minister. Scranton is a city of 125,000 inhabitants and is growing rapidly. The field is a difficult one and requires a strong man.

—Designs have been prepared for a new church building at Burlington, Ia., where F. D. Eisenhart is pastor. The congregation has voted to commence the erection at once. The building is to be of pressed brick with stone trimmings.

—A note from Lowell C. McPherson, Havana, Cuba, says: "We have had twenty-seven confessions during the past two weeks, and our work was never more hopeful. We have had thirty-six actual accessions thus far in this missionary year."

—The brethren at Lebo, Kan., appear to be in a prosperous condition. The membership has been more than doubled in the five months that Wallace M. Stuckey has had charge as pastor. The church building has just been re-decorated.

—J. D. Dabney, of Pittsburg, Pa., has been on a visit to Ohio, and at Kent gave a lecture under the auspices of the Woman's Relief Corps on the subject of his tour in Bible lands, which, we hear, was most interesting and exceedingly instructive.

—J. E. Lynn, of Warren, Ohio, who is widely known in our brotherhood as a Christian gentleman, a scholar, a successful pastor and an able evangelist, will be available for one meeting next year. It will be a fortunate church which secures his services.

—C. Manley Rice, of Wheeling, W. Va., has engaged for a week of lectures at Bethany Assembly this summer. The Island Church is making large preparations for a simultaneous revival next October, when W. H. Pinkerton is to be the evangelist.

—A. C. Smither is preaching during this month on the following announced topics: "The Unaccountable Man—The Christ; The Unaccountable Book—The Bible; The Unaccountable Kingdom—The Church; The Most Unaccountable Thing of All."

—Frank Allen, our pastor at Odessa, Mo., is visting his brother-in-law, A. W. Kokendoffer, Mexico, Mo., where he preached on the Lord's day. Brother Allen has just been married at Lexington, Mo., to Anna Mary Meek, who has been teacher of music at Central Methodist College of that place. The bridal couple will visit Brother Allen's mother and sister at Poplar Bluff before returning to Odessa.

JOSEPH REILLY
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
Is prepared to give all legal matters skillful attention. Correspondence solicited.
Office, 222 Market St., St. Louis.

—C. F. Trimble, of Blackwell, Okla., who for a number of years has done splendid work in that state, desires a change of location, preferring work in some section of Colorado or a state of about the same climate. He is a successful evangelist and is well commended by Bro. J. M. Monroe and other persons of character.

—Milo Atkinson has been with the Tabernacle Church at Marion, Ind., for four months, during which period there were twenty additions and the church indebtedness reduced almost one-half by the raising of $750 toward wiping out the incumbrance.

—A. E. Cory is visiting churches and conventions. His address is Augusta, Ill. Any churches wishing his services can address him there. One of our preachers who heard the missionary said that he is the livest wire he has met for some time. He has a great message.

O. D. MAPLE,

Who has resigned at Marion, Ohio, after a successful meeting by Bruce Brown, and the dedication of a $15,000 church building.

—J. H. Rogers, a colored evangelist, who recently went to Ocala, Fla., to get together the scattered Disciples among the negro race, has during the past week been preaching in a school house at West Tampa, which has a population of nearly 10,000 colored people.

—If any of our young men are contemplating entering Harvard University and desire to engage in ministerial work they may be put into communication with a fine mission opening in one of Boston's suburbs by addressing Joseph A. Serena, 22 Linden avenue, Somerville, Massachusetts.

—W. W. Winbigler, of Converse, Ind., a graduate of Bethany College, with some fourteen years' experience in the ministry, desires to change his location. Brother Winbigler is a good man and capable of leading a church into larger Christian life, as well as building it up substantially every year in membership. He ought to receive calls immediately.

—"Every step of the way since January 1 has been a step in advance. We are now looking toward a great evangelistic campaign, a new church building and a living link missionary." This is the glowing report from E. P. Wise, pastor of the church at East Liverpool, Ohio.

—A note from A. E. Dubber, pastor at Fort Worth, Tex., says that June 3 was a great day with the Tabernacle Church. The property was cleared of a six thousand dollar debt that had hung over it for years, and there were two additions also to the membership. We rejoice with the brethren at Fort Worth.

—The Foreign Society needs a male physician for South Tung Chow, China. D. E. Dannenberg and John Johnson and their families are in South Tung Chow. They are a long distance from any physician. There are at this station and about it hundreds of thousands of people in need of medical help.

—Frank Beach paid a visit to The Christian-Evangelist office when on his way to Cincinnati for a conference with the Board of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. Brother Beach has recently finished a post-graduate course in Texas Christian University, and has, with his wife, volunteered for the foreign field.

—With less than thirty Disciples within reach, and no pastor, we can agree with E. Everett Hollingworth that the church at Conyers, Ga., for which he has been preaching the fourth Lord's day each month, is doing very well. Its March offering amounted to $16.50, and it has just given another $21.25 for foreign missions. If all our churches in Georgia did half as much, proportionately, we would be out of the rut in that state.

—Another gift on the annuity plan makes the amount placed at the disposal of the Benevolent Association by Brother and Sister Humphreys, of Eureka Springs, Ark., $400. Sister P. D. Hawkkins, of Canton, Mo., has just given $500 to this ministry. Sister Hawkins has been a friend of the Lord's poor for many years. Any one wishing to help in this work address J. H. Mohorter, 903 Aubert avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

—We are delighted to know that the work of the Magnolia Avenue Church, Los Angeles, Cal., has so increased by its own growth and by that of its rapidly developing mission that it has been found necessary to call an assistant pastor, and C. C. Bentley, recently pastor of the church at Hanford, who has had success in the ministry, has been secured for this purpose and entered upon the work June 1. Jesse P. McKnight is the pastor.

—Evangelist Herbert Yeuell, before the close of his meeting at Winston-Salem, N. C., was called to conduct a union meeting at Madison in the same state, and began his work in that city June 10 for a ten days' meeting. This is the kind of work we have desired to see our evangelists engaged in, and we shall watch with interest the results of Brother Yeuell's labors at Madison. He begins his work at Manchester, N. H., July 1.

will be helped in securing an education at "Iowa Christian College." Board and tuition $30 per term. Correspondence courses also. Write Pres. Chas. J. Burton, Oskaloosa, Iowa. Free catalogue.

—The twenty-one counties comprising the first missionary district of Northeast Arkansas, whose purpose is to evangelize the district, help weak churches, and help the work of the Master in any way in harmony with his word, will hold its second convention at Stuttgart, July 10-12. James H. Brooks, of Blytheville, is the corresponding secretary.

—We have just received the gratifying intelligence from Dean Lhamon, of the Missouri Bible College, that the curators of the state university, by unanimous vote, will grant credits hereafter for studies pursued in the Bible College by their students. This privilege, of course, applies to courses of study given by any religious body whose work meets with the approval of the university authorities. This is a great step forward in the interest of Bible instruction in connection with state universities.

—F. E. Udell, one of the elders of the Union Avenue Christian Church, of this city, who, with his wife, has been spending a part of the winter and spring in traveling in the Orient, delivered a very interesting lecture in one of the parlors of the Union Avenue Church on Monday evening of this week, on "Egypt; Its History, Its People, Its Religion, Its Tombs and Temples, Methods of Agriculture, the Nile," etc., which was much enjoyed. He presides over the Missouri Missionary Convention at Hannibal this week.

—Mark A. Collins, minister in Waynesboro, Pa., a church started but two years ago, desires an evangelist for a meeting in September or October. Waynesboro is a growing town of about 6,000 inhabitants, in which our people have a good house of worship in the very best location in the town. The people of the town in the main are descendants of the old Pennsylvania Dutch stock, and are not easily moved. None but an able preacher with almost infinite patience would be equal to the task. Who is the man?

—W. H. Kindred, Atlanta, Ill., has for a couple of years been working in the most difficult fields in the state of Michigan. His meetings have almost uniformly been successful in building up the congregations and in every way strengthening the work. He is willing to go into hard fields and accept the free will offerings for his compensation. He is available for special work through June, July and August, as well as a portion of the autumn. He ought to be called to work at once.

—Geo. Moody, musical director and choir master, Madison, Wis., is just closing a season of very successful evangelistic work. Brother Moody is one of the most experienced and ablest men in this work in the United States. He has worked with some of the great evangelists, he has been director of choruses for Chautauqua Assemblies, and has been prominent in many musical events of various kinds. Those who are hunting an able leader, a soloist and personal worker will find in Brother Moody a man after their own heart. You will be delighted with his character and his ability.

—The church at Uniontown, Pa., is in the midst of enlargement of its building which, when completed, will have a seating capacity of 1,500, with ample room and modern equipment for a Bible school of from 500 to 600 pupils, and kindergarten room, and other conveniences. It will be one of the completest soul-saving plants in Western Pennsylvania. Since last report there have been fourteen additions, and the Bible school averages about 300 now. The home mission offering was $300, and the church thus becomes a living link in the Home Society, in addition to occupying the same rank in the Foreign Society.

—Referring to his meeting at Winston-Salem, Herbert Yeuell writes to the Editor of this paper, saying: "Too much praise can not be given to Brother J. A. Hopkins for his work here, and his coming here six months ago has saved this church. He planned large things for this meeting." Brother Yeuell is to dedicate the new church at Petersburg, Va., the latter part of August, this church having grown out of the tabernacle meeting which he held less than a year ago. He also writes that he has just learned that the Park Theater at Manchester, N. H., can be secured July 1, instead of July 8, and everything is being put in readiness for that meeting, for the success of which we invite the prayers of the brotherhood.

—"In a recent paragraph entitled, "Help the Pacific Christian," we asked contributions from the brethren to help the publishers of that paper to pay their indebtedness and get on their feet again. This seems to us about the most important service we can render to our brethren on the Pacific coast. The Christian Publishing Company hereby pledges $250 for this purpose, and asks its readers, who can do so, to join with us in helping these brave, self-sacrificing brethren to continue the publication of their paper. Address "Pacific Christian," San Francisco, Cal., or Portland, Ore.

—J. J. Handsaker is compelled by the failing health of his wife to give up his work in Jamaica and return to America. Some of the features of his successful ministry in Kingston, Jamaica, where he was engaged in the work of the C. W. B. M., were the large increase in attendance at the regular services and at Sunday-school (the latter having doubled), the greatest increase in the membership of the church since its founding, the organization of children's and young men's Bible classes, and a high moral uplift of the people. The church presented Brother Handsaker with an address and a purse on the eve of his departure, and in his brief speech he urged the members to heartily support the new pastor who should come to them, and dealt lovingly, but courageously, with some of the conditions which are a handicap to the work in the island.

—The Board of Church Extension could use seventy-five thousand dollars of annuity money at the present time, applications being on hand since March 1 for that amount. The treasury was never so low as at present, although the fund now amounts to over $558,000. On June 1 there was only a little over five thousand dollars in the general fund, and this must be used very shortly in closing up loans. No others are likely to be granted until after the September offering. The board recently received a bequest of $2,850 from the estate of Harrison La Due, of Weedsport, N. Y. Annuities aggregating $1,050 have also been received, $350 of this amount coming from friends in Nebraska, $100 from a friend in Oklahoma, $500 from a friend in Washington, Pa., and $100 from friends in Troy, N. Y. This last was the one hundred and sixty-fourth gift to the annuity fund. All this money goes at once into the work of building mission churches. Concerning this plan, inquire of G. W. Muckley, 600 Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—We are in receipt of a letter from James E. Hawes, minister, Ada, O., saying that he has just come from the bedside of J. V. Updike, our beloved evangelist, who is entirely helpless with nervous prostration. Brother Hawes writes that Brother Updike has been ill since early in March; that he is slightly improved at present, and that his physician speaks quite hopefully of his recovery. He is at his rural residence near Celina, O. Brother Hawes also writes: "To add to the seriousness of the situation, Sister Updike fell and broke her arm about two months ago. She is slowly recovering." We are sure our readers will join with us in sincere sympathy with Brother Updike and his wife in their affliction, and in the prayer, also, for their safe recovery. Brother Updike is widely known and loved, and has given himself too unsparingly, perhaps, to the work of evangelization. He is not able to reply to the many letters that come to him, but his numerous friends may know that he appreciates their love and sympathy.

An Old and Well-tried Remedy

—From notes from George W. Perrin, the superintendent, and Brother Tyler we learn that the Sunday-school of the Central Christian Church, Denver, contributed $638 for missions on children's day. There were 369 present, 131 in one class. It was this class, presumably, that gave $210. One class gave six dollars per capita. This is probably the largest contrbution to foreign missions ever made by a Bible school in Denver. The school fixed as its goal $400. Brother Tyler writes: "Bayard Craig is doing the best work of his life in the Central. The anniversary of his coming to Denver, first, twenty-five years ago, will be duly celebrated in a few months. J. B. Haston began his pastorate at the East Side Christian Church yesterday." Brother Haston, we note from the report of his sermon published in "The Republican," thinks that Denver is the destined center of America and believes that one dollar given this year to make Denver Christian will count more than twenty dollars in fifteen years from to-day.

Call for Six Good Ministers.

There is a demand for a half dozen good ministers in the first missionary district of northeast Arkansas. Only good men, and good preachers, men who can say, "Neither count I my life dear unto myself," will be considered. They may be either single or married. The places are desirable as to location, two of them being college towns, and some of them noted in the state as health resorts. We have church buildings in some of these towns and in the others good lots paid for, and with prospect of church buildings. The opportunities for the right kind of workers are good. Address me, sending your credentials, and enclosing a stamp for reply.

A Good Example.

Last year at Marshall, Mrs. Sarah McCoy Crank, then minister of the church at Liberal, Mo., pledged that church for $100 to this fund. Everybody nearly knows the history of that town and congregation, for the town was organized on infidel lines, and that only through much tribulation was the church planted there. It has been persecuted, maligned, ofttimes nearly destroyed, but the coming of Sister Crank proved to be a wonderful uplift and the church has gone right on. In the winter, however, Sister Crank's health failed, she with her husband moved to Paragould, Ark., but she sent me a letter not to fear, that that $100 would be paid. I have just had a letter from her telling me that the $100 was in hand.

There are 200 churches in Missouri that are more able to pay this $100 than the little church at Liberal, and I thought the writing of this as a last word would help some that are slow to make the pledge.

It is not too late. If you are not coming to Hannibal send the pledge there for any amount. We need $3,237 more. Failure would be shame, but that is not coming. Success is in sight. Help us attain it.

Yours in his name, T. A. Abbott.

Advancing the Cause in Montana.

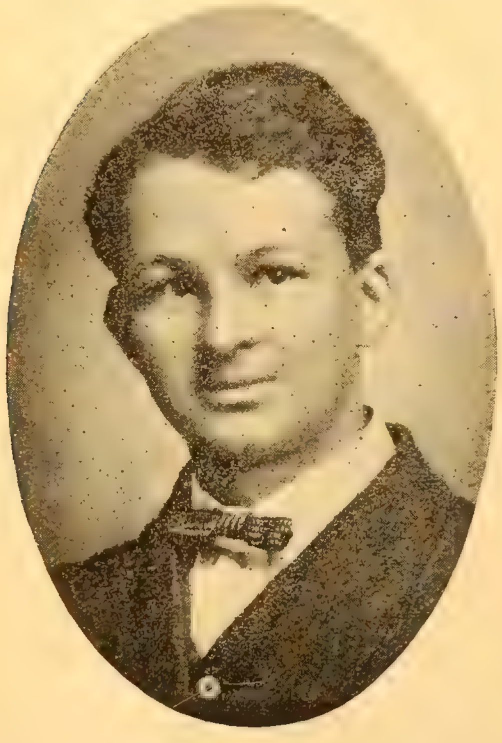
F. H. Groom, one of our Missouri boys, is now state evangelist for Montana, and has just been making his first trip through the state. The work outlined by the missionary board for the first three months was that of visiting every church in the state, presenting the needs of the field, and taking pledges for Montana missions. Since March 1 almost all the churches have been visited, and the sum of $816 has been raised for the state work. All things considered this is a good testimonial of the loyalty and liberality of the Montana brethren, who will have to be educated, as well as brethren in other states, to the importance of putting down enough money to make a cause succeed without its dragging along through the years because of insufficiency of means when great opportunities are presented. Although Montana is the third largest state in the union our brotherhood is but scantily represented. In the hurried visit of Brother Groom over the state there were sixteen added, eight by baptism. This month he expects to take up the evangelistic work proper, and hopes to go into the promising towns, in many of which our plea is practically unknown. The increased mining activities, the reclamation of arid lands, and the opening of the Flathead and Crow Indian reservations will turn thousands of people toward Montana during the next few years, and it is imperative that we seize the opoprtunity for the presentation of our plea for the union of God's people throughout that promising state.



F. H. GROOM,
The new State Evangelist for Montana.

Hannibal Christian Church, where the Missouri Convention meets, June 15-20.

Brother Groom was born at Linn Creek, Mo., graduated from the state normal at Warrensburg, spent some time at Drake University, and part of one summer preached for the Fourth Christian Church, St. Louis, but lately has been in Indian Territory doing successful pastoral and evangelistic work.

We note that the brethren in Montana have just put out a little state paper which ought to serve well the cause there.

Missouri State Bible School Work.

The institute at Columbia touched the Bible school, Christian College, the Bible College, and the Normal Institute, thus widening the scope of its influence.——At Centralia, both in the institute work with the teachers, and by public address on Sunday night, we enjoyed the opportunity of guiding the minds of workers and people to greater and better things.——At Budd Park an institute of great value was conducted. A teacher training class was formed of some 18 members. This school has now so outgrown its quarters that several of the classes have to meet outside the house under a canvass "fly." A bigger and better house is, as the physicians phrase it, strongly "indicated" at Budd Park. The Marionville Convention was State Convention No. 1. If it was not a state convention in fact, it certainly was in numbers and spirit. At Clarksburg, the recently purchased and repaired house of worship was dedicated amid much rejoicing and note-burning accompaniment, followed by a big Moniteau county dinner in the grove and Sunday-school mass meeting in the afternoon.——Pastor Corwine is seeing the fruits of his labors. It was a delight to give the California workers a message the same Sunday night of the dedication.——The Maryville Institute was all too short, especially as on the first night we had to speak "to beat the band" just waiting in front of the church to start a band concert at the stroke of nine. The teacher training will be taken up by Pastor Denton and his superintendent and teachers. Mr. and Mrs. Deerwester, of the New Normal School, will prove valuable acquisitions to the Maryville work. Bros. G. W. Terrell, of Stanberry; T. A. Williams, of Albany, and O. G. Null, of Pickering, came to attend the institute.——H. G. Bennett has recently been engaged in institutes at LaPlata, Lucerne, Newtown, Garden Prairie and Chillicothe.——Horace Siberell has been at work at Sikeston, Greenville, Shiloh, Asherville, and has aided in the district convention and perfected the organization of one congregation and one Sunday-school.——R. B. Havener visited ten places, held one meeting, and organized four schools during April.

Every church and Bible school ought to be represented at Hannibal, June 15-20.

A Proposed Comprehensive History of the Disciples of Christ.

Nearly forty years ago I began to accumulate material for writing a comprehensive history of our religious movement. Owing to other pressing engagements, as well as various circumstances over which I had no control, the work from time to time has been delayed, but never entirely abandoned. Recently I have been urged by several eminent men in our ranks, in whose judgment I have great confidence, to continue this work to completion, and I have about made up my mind to give earnest attention to this important matter, so that the work may be ready before our Centennial meeting at Pittsburg in 1909.

Now I want the aid of my brethren, for without this the work can not be made all that it should be. We have already a few very valuable histories, when looked at from the proper point of view, but it will be readily conceded by even the authors of these books that they do not treat our religious movement in such a comprehensive way as to meet all the conditions of the case. Mine will comprehend the whole movement in its genesis, character, development and influence. It will deal with the principal men and women who have been the chief actors in the movement, and will aim to weave around these the great events and facts connected with the growth of the movement. In short, it will aim to produce an exhaustive treatment of the principles and aims, the facts and circumstances, the failures and triumphs, as well as the present position of the Disciples as they are related to the world and to other religious bodies which now make up the sum total of what is called Protestant Christendom.

Will my brethren everywhere help me with this great work? I have practically given up many of my engagements and literary labors, and will devote myself almost exclusively to the accomplishment of this great and responsible task. If I have the help that I desire, and am spared for this labor, I hope, by the blessing of God, not to disappoint the reasonable expectations of my brethren. Help can be given me in the following ways:

1. By sending me brief anecdotes and incidents connected with the lives of men and women who have been prominently connected with our religious movement. These need not be men or women of national reputation. Often it has happened that whole neighborhoods have been influenced by men scarcely known outside of these neighborhoods, and yet the aggregation of these influences is what has helped on our religious progress. In all cases where the matter sent me is used as written, due credit will be given, and where simply reference is made, the source of my information will be acknowledged.

2. Books and papers in any way connected with our movement will be gratefully received, and after I have finished with them, they will be returned to those furnishing them, if this is desired. I would be glad to have files of our religious papers, or even single papers or magazines, especially down to the year 1890, though any since that time will be very acceptable. Send also photos and portraits of distinguished actors.

3. Any suggestions with respect to the scope and character of the work will also be gratefully received.

All communications should be addressed to me as follows: W. T. Moore, the remedy for the third condition, poverty. Let every one lay by in store as the Lord has prospered him. If you deem a 10 per cent a fair proportion to belong to God, let that be carefully, conscientiously laid by for his service. You say that will not be enough, give more if you will, but know this that God will bless the offerings of his people. The usual way is a shame to any people, which is to put the Lord's money down in our own pockets and spend it for our personal pleasure and then grumble that we are too poor to do anything for the Lord's work. "Will a man rob God?" Take heed lest this be true of us. With every one turning into the treasurer something every week it is only a question of time when something will be done. We are scarce of preachers. Churches must learn more to help themselves. Preachers should train them to do this. No church is really weak that does its duty. It may have poor leaders and only a few poor members, but if it serves God to its best ability, regularly, constantly, with mind, heart and money in God's sight, it is strong and it will be represented among the "blood-washed throng." No one need be wanting in courage who has the Lord and his promises for daily cheer and is journeying towards the "Eternal City."

Weak Churches.

TWO PREACHERS IN THE OZARKS

J. D. Babb "riding his circuit."

Harold Bell Wright in camp.

The Assistant Editor, while on a few days' fishing jaunt recently in the Ozark Mountains of southwest Missouri, unexpectedly happened upon two of our ministers located in that region, and promptly "shot" them with his camera. J. D. Babb is one of our big-hearted Missouri preachers who travels to his appointments on horseback or in buggy, as the state of the roads and personal predilection may determine. He supports a large family by combining farming with his preaching appointments, which are at Weaubleau, Walnut Grove and Aldrich, which is a mission point now preparing to build a church. Brother Babb's home is near Buffalo, Mo., where our church is the principle one of the town. It is doing good service under the ministrations of J. Q. Biggs. We had the pleasure of worshiping with the brethren on Lord's day. The congregation at night was particularly good. The bulk of the young people of the town attend the Christian church.

"There is a Christian minister over there who wants to see you." The Assitant Editor's tent was being pitched some one hundred yards from a camp already established, and that was the message that came to him. When he visited that camp he found it an ideal one, for Harold Bell Wright is an experienced camper. Forced from a city pastorate by the threat of consumption, he took charge of the church at Lebanon, Mo., and when possible goes out into the woods, for he is a lover of nature and this kind of life helps him to keep fit for the duties to which he has devoted himself. We found Brother Wright revising the manuscript of a new story between the times that he was catching trout and searching out the mysteries of nature. His last story, "That Printer of Udell's" has had a greater success than any book, perhaps, published in our brotherhood for the time that it has been on the market. We were most cordially invited to share Brother Wright's tent. We enjoyed greatly the fellowship with these southwest Missouri preachers.

Conventions.

Arkansas Convention.

The annual convention of Disciples of Christ in Arkansas was held with the church at Russellville, May 23-27. The program was a strong one, and, although we were disappointed that several names on the program had to be passed on account of absence, those relied upon were generally there and filled their places well.

The new men in the state who attended were J. C. Creel, J. W. Ellis, J. M. Berry, A. G. Lucas, T. A. Williams, J. R. Crank. Letters of regret that they were unable to attend were received from G. B. Weaver, Little Rock; M. L. Anthony, Rogers; C. D. Purlee, Siloam Springs; J. A. Deatherage, Harrison; J. C. Wright, in a meeting at Paris; J. H. Brooks, Blytheville; J. A. McCarty, Stuttgart, and others.

The results, in part, are as follows: About six years' work, 400 baptisms, 207 otherwise; money raised for all purposes through co-operative work about $8,000; five churches organized; several houses built and planned. E. C. BROWNING.

Ontario Missionary Meeting.

The last convention of the Disciples of Christ in Ontario was held May 31 to June 4, at Owen Sound. From the opening devotional on Thursday afternoon to the close on Monday morning it was an interesting and well attended session. Considerably over a hundred delegates were present, besides the Owen Sound church and many of its friendly neighbors in that delightful and hospitable little city.

President Higgins was unanimously reelected, and the changes which were made in the board were on account of the infirmities of age and inability to attend its meetings. A loving tribute was paid to that grand old brother, J. Lediard, upon his retirement, and his daughter, who has been chosen for the Japanese mission, was given an ovation.

The principal speeches of the convention were, Federation, by J. M. Van Horn, of Toronto; Foreign Missions, by A. McLean; The Business Men's Association of the Christian Church, by J. W. Henry, of St. Louis; The Disciple and the Word of God, by John Williams, of Collingwood; Our Relation to Christian Union, by W. J. Cadman, of Bowmanville; Missionary Sermon, by J. P. McLeod, of Glencairn; the West and Our Duty to It, by John Munro, of Grand Valley; Miss Rioch, returned missionary, talked interestingly on Japan; Miss Lediard, on Missionary Studies; Miss Kilgour, on Mission Work in Thibet. The Sunday-school session, led by F. E. Lumley, of St. Thomas, contained some splendid short addresses by Lumley, Wallace, Buckingham and Stephens. The young people's session was full of good things and was led by J. L. Leary, O. W. Hern, I. Konkle, T. Mason, H. S. Calkins and others, participating.

Evangelist Stevenson's address on "Ontario's Needs," was a rousing call for larger things and greater liberality.

W. C. McDougall, of St. Thomas, made a splendid talk on his recent appointment by the Foreign Society to Calcutta, and bespoke the hearty support of the brotherhood for the St. Thomas College under its new management. The St. Thomas College rally on Lord's day morning and the quartette of Gospel workers and singers was a most enjoyable feature.

All the Protestant churches threw open their doors to the convention sessions and also to our visiting preachers on Lord's day, and all the city came to hear them. The beautiful communion service was conducted on Sunday afternoon by Elder C. Sinclair, of St. Thomas, after a great sermon by Brother Cadman.

Dr. Somerville, of the Presbyterian Church, was especially gracious to us, and not only tendered the use of his fine roomy church, but attended several sessions and spoke words of cheer and brotherly love. The meeting at Owen Sound will long be remembered with delight by all who participated. The weather was ideal and all Christian people, regardless of affiliation, threw open the doors of their homes and made us welcome.

The Christian Publishing Company was represented by Bro. O. D. Fornier, of Miarton, and many of their recent publications were carried away by the visiting ministers.

Bro. H. S. Calkins and his splendid little congregation deserve the thanks and congratulations of all.

The 1907 convention will be at Guelph, next June.

Oregon—Northeast District.

The second annual convention of the northeast district of the O. C. M. C. met at Milton. There was a good attendance for a work so new. A well-arranged program was almost completely carried out. Mr. H. B. Smith, resident minister of Milton, gave the address of welcome. J. Perry Conder, state Sunday-school evangelist, offered many timely and helpful suggestions in regard to Sunday-school work, and in an enthusiastic way told of the many needy and inviting fields. The session of the C. W. B. M. was one of much interest, Mrs. Humber, of Eugene, being the chief mission speaker. A report of good work being done in the Chinese mission in Portland was given, and a very touching story of a girl-widow from India was related. An unusually deep interest was made for mission work. The evening sessions were devoted to preaching, Victor W. Dorris, recently from Georgetown, Ky., doing the preaching. Most important of all was the report of the district evangelist, N. H. Brooks, who has been working under the board for the past four months, with Brother and Sister Webb as singers. For such a brief time of work a good report was given, four meetings having been held, with over 150 additions, ministers located at each place and something like $5,000 raised for their support; besides the evangelist and singers raised means for their support on the field. It was but natural then that the committee on future work should recommend that Brother Brooks, of Pendleton, be continued as our district evangelist, with the understanding that all the churches of the district pledge themselves to the support of the work, and that a regular day for such offering be established. The committee further expressed the sentiment that the northeast district is in full sympathy with the Oregon Christian Missionary Convention and desires to work in connection with it; and further that this convention of Eastern Oregon should have and would ask that we have a representative upon the state board. Needy fields were discussed, and it was decided that the evangelist should next go to Grass Valley, at which place work has already begun.

The committee on time and place recommend May 5, 6, 7, 1907, for the time of next convention, the place to be left for later decision. The following were chosen as officers for the coming year: Mr. Hogue, Pendleton, president; L. J. Foss, Athena, vice president; Chas. A. Musselman, Heppner, secretary; H. B. Smith, Milton, treasurer. Such success in so short a time and with such limited means, bespeaks for the work a very bright future. With such a good evangelistic man in the field, and with the hearty co-operation and prayer of all the churches, large results must follow.

CHAS. A. MUSSELMAN, Secty.

West Kentucky.

The new $25,000 building for the Mayfield congregation, to be erected at once, will be of light-colored pressed brick and classic in design.——The work of Bernard Bass, of Paducah, is in a most prosperous condition. With the aid of W. J. Hudspeth he recently held a meeting, with sixty-six additions to his congregation. After completing his meeting at Tenth Street Church with Brother Bass, Brother Hudspeth held a meeting at Mechanicsburg, a suburb of Paducah, and organized a new congregation with thirty-three members. These two Paducah meetings of about one month's duration thus aggregated ninety-nine additions.——The congregation at Fulton is in excellent condition, under the able management of J. C. Reed. They contemplate the erection at an early date of a new house of worship. This is an era of church building in West Kentucky.—G. L. Lewellen, Mayfield, Ky.

Hancock County (Ill.) Notes.

The church at Hamilton, under the enthusiastic leadership of H. G. Waggoner, is prospering splendidly, and the membership is rapidly increasing ——C. M. McKim, of Dallas, reports the work there as being in excellent condition.——Brother Shiplett has moved to Burnside, where he has preached for some time. This adds another to the list of resident preachers. He is highly spoken of both as a man and a preacher.——The church at Denver is in the best condition in all its history, and it has always been an active, working church. Brother Cleaver, of Canton, Mo., preaches for them half time; he is scholarly, a fluent speaker, and one of the most cordial and congenial of men. ——The church at Bowen is also in good condition. Brother Lessig, of Canton, has done a good work there and is held in high esteem.——Mt. Pleasant, too, is active and wide awake. Brother Sears, of Canton, preaches for them half time. We have some splendid people in this congregation. This is one of our oldest churches.——T. J. Thompson, of Carthage, preaches for the church at Lomax. He is a strong man, and is a great help to us at Carthage.——Miss Lura V. Thompson has been spending a few days at home after an arduous campaign throughout the state in the interest of the C. W. B. M.——The "Willing Workers" of the Carthage church are spending several hundreds of dollars on a kitchen, which can also be used for Sunday-school purposes.——Prof. R. E. Henry, of Augusta, was ordained to the ministry by the writer at West Point. He is a Hancock county boy, one of our fine fellows socially, intellectually and every other way. He has already gone to Moline as the regular minister of our new mission church; he is supported by the Rock Island and Carthage churches. We expect to hear of good things from our living link preacher.——The church at Carthage has taken up the Alton work as their living link work in the Home Missionary Society, and the Home Board, through W. J. Wright, is now looking for some good, strong man. Alton is one of the most important points in the state, as is also Moline; this gives the Carthage church two of the finest missionary fields in the state.

Judge C. J. Scofield, of Carthage, not only conducts successfully an immense law practice, but has more calls for special addresses and officiates at more weddings and funerals than any preacher in Hancock county. The churches of this county owe more to the steadfast devotion and fine ability of Brother Scofield than to any other human agency.——The church at La Harpe is preparing for a great evangelistic effort, under the leadership of W. F. Shearer, of Angola, Ind., whom we wish we could retain for a winter's campaign in Hancock county. L. G. Huff has made a magnificent record at La Harpe, in the face of many serious obstacles.——The church at West Point is another of our fine congregations. They have recently paid off the last of the debt against their splendid house of worship. S. W. Elam, of Canton, Mo., preaches for them half time and the membership is growing, both spiritually and numerically.——We hear good reports from the church at Augusta, where N. E. Cory is the capable leader of the forces.——The church at Plymouth recently burned the mortgage against their fine church, and are anxious to locate some good man as regular minister. This is really a fine field. They have a good house free from debt. ——Bertie Taylor preaches for the Stillwell Church half time and the work is moving forward in fine shape. Brother Taylor is one of the best of our Hancock county men, and no man is loved more than he. The church at Stillwell is young, but full of faith and good works.——The church at Ferris has a new minister, but the writer has not learned his name. This is one of our hustling churches.——The church at Adrain wants a preacher for part time. We have some fine folks there and a good house of worship; a fine field for some good, strong man.——The congregation at Oak Grove have had no preaching for a long time. They have a good building and keep up a Sunday-school. They are capable of doing better things than they are now doing.—J. M. Elam, Carthage, Illinois.

Southwest Missouri Convention.

The convention of the Southwest Missouri district met at Marionville and was by far the greatest convention ever held in this district. It was great in attendance, great in its spirit and fellowship. The program was of a high order. C. M. Sharpe, of Columbia, delivered three splendid addresses. J. H. Hardin, our state Bible school superintendent, was at his best, and made a strong impression for better Bible schools and better teachers. Ben Abbott presented state missions and over $1,000 was raised for the permanent fund. The following officers were elected: W. J. Turner, of Joplin, president; J. R. Blunt, of Richland, vice president; Joseph Gaylor, Springfield, corresponding secretary; Simpson Ely, Joplin, recording secretary, and Newel L. Sims, treasurer.

The C. W. B. M. session was one of the most interesting. No other department of the work shows more evidence of growth in the district than C. W. B. M. work, under the leadership of Mrs. Nell Glenn, of Webb City. The Endeavor session, under the leadership of R. H. Waggoner, reached a high pitch of enthusiasm. In fact, every speaker was at his best. The people of Marionville did themselves great credit by the splendid manner in which they entertained the convention.—Joseph Gaylor.

Pettis County, Mo.

The churches of Pettis county met in La Monte. It had been six years since we had a convention. A call was made by W. W. Herold, of Sedalia; a few persons met in his office and elected some officers, who called a committee to make a program, which was well carried out at the convention—the best ever held in the county. The house was filled at each session, the churches were well represented and those on the program did their parts well. The convention was opened with a sermon by B. F. Hill, of California. The next session was centered upon the discussion of the ordinances of the church, especially the communion. This was introduced by a sermon by Brother Elmore, of Sweet Springs, then a talk by T. A. Abbott was followed by a general discussion. It was the most impressive and far-reaching morning's work I ever witnessed. W. F. Hamann, of Sedalia, preached the afternoon sermon, and J. M. Rudy gave a splendid talk on good citizenship in the evening. This being only a preliminary meeting we may expect many good things in August, when we meet at Green Ridge in full force.

There have been four added at Lamonte by baptism recently. We are in search of an evangelistic team for a month in the fall some time. We would like to have our meeting about October if we could. Lamonte has held her own meetings for about eight years now. Our work at Walnut Branch Chapel in the country is doing well. We will go there for a time on second Sundays at 3 p. m. and at 8 p. m. The church takes this plan of widening its missionary efforts.—I. H. Fuller.

Ohio.

One of our Ohio preachers has gone to his reward. S. C. Humphreys, of Akron, died the last week of May. He was a good man and served well in the kingdom.——T. L. Fowler will leave Minerva to return to Canada, July 1. Minerva has just had a splendid meeting, with eighty additions.——S. H. Bartlett was chief man at the corner-stone laying at Springfield, May 27. They are building a $7,000 auditorium at Springfield. Brother Harp was recently quite seriously hurt in moving a piano, but is able to carry on his work. ——Harry Minnick has returned to his first love, New England. He goes June 1 from Van Wert to Worcester, Mass.——The Euclid Avenue Church, of Cleveland, is not only building a new $100,000 house, but at the same time launching a new work in the eastern part of Cleveland. A Sunday-school and prayer-meeting is maintained and doing well. This mission will be another good thriving church in a year or two.——The church at Chardon recently held a general rally. The official board sent out a neatly printed program to all the members. It was a great success.——C. A. Freer has resigned at Painesville, after a brief ministry of only fifteen months. He will enter the evangelistic field September 1.——Ohio Disciples were never so many or so rich as now. There is no excuse, therefore, why they should not take hold with a heroic hand and wipe out all our state debt this year. This can easily be done if there is a united and determined effort.——The Ohio state Christian Endeavor convention will be held at Tiffin the last week in June. "Our folks" have arranged for a "denominational rally."—If you will promise not to write this scribe about them, we will tell you of the following Ohio churches that want good preachers: Bellaire, Mt. Vernon, Niles, Alliance, Painesville, New Vienna, Dayton West Side, Minerva and Franklin Circle, Cleveland.——Why not plan to take that vacation at the time of the national convention at Buffalo? You can go half-fare and see Niagara Falls and attend a convention that will be more inspiring than all the summer resorts in the country. Go to Buffalo October 12-18.—C. A. Freer, Painesville, Ohio.

Wisconsin.

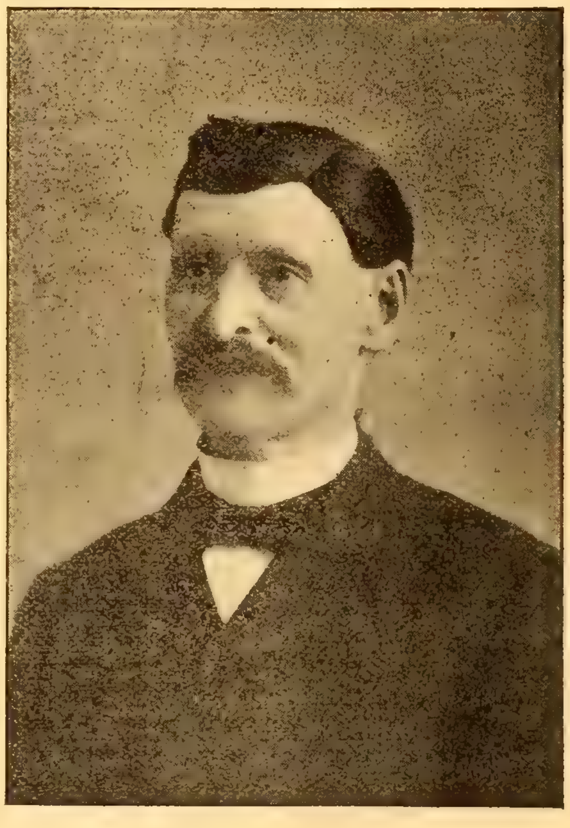
By the kind invitation of the minister of the church at Grand Rapids, I was with the church on its first anniversary, May 24. Their records show a growth of more than fifty per cent. They have a C. W. B. M., and a large Bible school, and they are well organized and alive in all departments of church activity. They are also thoroughly missionary in spirit, responding to the calls from all the boards. The congregation has been meeting in the G. A. R. hall, but they are tired of renting and are talking of building.——Chas. W. Dean has been the minister since November, and it is under his care that they have made the increase. The Disciples and Congregationalists of Ladysmith united in getting Brother Dean to give his "Studies in the Life of Jesus." It will pay any church to use him.



Julius Stone.

On my way home from Grand Rapids I visited Julius Stone, our Scandinavian evangelist, and found him and his good wife preparing to entertain the third "Unity Conference" of independent Scandinavian ministers and laymen, a meeting to discuss plans for uniting their scattered forces. There are thousands of these people in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa, and Brother Stone is doing all he can to lead them and get them to organize themselves into congregations, for they stand practically with us. The little church at Chippewa Falls will entertain this conference, which will, no doubt, be quite well attended. Brother Stone is planning to keep twelve delegates in his little home, and his family sleep in the barn. A Norwegian brother recently gave him a young horse to help him in his traveling through the country. I wish one hundred of our brethren might come to our rescue now in this work, for I think it is the most neglected of all our home fields. Ten dollars each would place it on a substantial footing. Brother Stone is also leading a congregation of Norwegian Disciples of 36 members in Chippewa Falls, with 50 or 60 more worshiping with them, and the number increasing. Besides, he is preaching occasionally to several hundred immersed believers in this and adjoining counties. The church at Angola, Ind., is assisting this work to the amount of $200 per year. Brethren, help us out. Seven baptisms recently at Rib Lake and two at Ladysmith.—H. F. Barstow, Cor. Sec., Ladysmith, Wis.

Kentucky Bible Schools.

The last South Kentucky convention, already reported in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, was in many respects the best convention ever held in South Kentucky. The Bible school sessions were at the close of the convention. One of the most interesting features was an account by R. H. Crossfield of the plans in use at the well organized school in Owensboro. J. W. Ligon gave a timely address on "The Need for Organized Bible School Work." D. F. Stafford, Louisville, was the fraternal delegate from the state convention. George O. McBroom, J. K. Bondurant and Mrs. E. S. Sargent gave short addresses on "The Best Features in My Bible School." The report of the evangelist was read on Wednesday morning, and the suggestions made regarding the better organizing of the work were enthusiasticaly adopted. The apportionment plan for the raising of funds from the schools, the districting of South Kentucky for the holding of conventions and the electing of officers to preside over the Bible school sessions of the conventions were the chief items. The letters apportioning the schools will be sent out soon. J. K. Bondurant, Paducah, was elected president; E. E. Owsley, Owensboro, vice president, and J. W. Hopper, Bardwell, recording secretary.

Cincinnati, O.

The work of the Disciples in Cincinnati was never in a more prosperous condition than it is now. Sunday-school work especially is flourishing; the offering for home missions as a whole was good indeed. In addition to the regular offering many of the churches made a special offering to the San Francisco work.——The church at Dayton, Ky., has called R. T. Nooe, of Beard, and he will enter upon his new work early in June. This is an important field and Brother Nooe seems to be the right man for the place.——The Richmond Street Church has paid off all its indebtedness since Brother Thompson took up his work and is now planning to paint the church both inside and out. There are additions at almost every service.——The church at Columbia had a meeting recently in which there were twenty-five additions and the young church much strengthened financially. The writer assisted the pastor, H. C. Bowen.——The church at Lockland became self-sustaining May 1. I took charge of the work five years ago, and as we enter upon the sixth year the experiences and successes of the past give much encouragement for the future. S. H. Bartlett, our state secretary, was with us on May 6 and preached for us. This was a happy day for us all.——The Evangelical Alliance is arranging to have Mr. Chapman and his workers for a campaign in the spring of 1907. Our own churches are expecting to co-operate in this effort, and are also planning to have a great union meeting, conducted by Charles Reign Scoville, next year—W. G. Loucks, Station R.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. # Commencements.

Christian College.

Christian College, of Columbia, Mo., has celebrated its fifty-fifth Commencement with as great success as any in its long and useful history. The interest of the occasion was intensified by the announcement that Mr. Carnegie thought well enough of the institution to offer it twenty-five thousand dollars for the erection of a new Academic Hall, provided the friends of the college would raise twenty-five thousand dollars for an endowment fund. The college already has the most modern plant of any of our institutions, with the exception of its Academic Hall, to replace which with a new and thoroughly up-to-date building has been the wish of the management ever since the recent erection of the splendid modern dormitories and auditorium. The college has been growing at such a rapid rate that the new building has become a necessity, and it is to be hoped that it will soon stand on the campus.

Last year has been a most successful one in every way, as was evidenced both by the attendance and enthusiasm, and actual results presented during the commencement week. This began with the art reception, when the studio was thrown open by the art students for the public to examine their work. The orchestra concert followed, and the development along this line has been remarkable. The elocution students showed their powers in the presentation of a little drama, and some of the graduating students in music and elocution rendered special programs. The baccalaureate sermon, by L. J. Marshall, of Independence, Mo., was a fine deliverance enjoyed by an audience that completely filled every part of the building. The ensemble concert was a very delightful feature. The real Commencement ceremonies began with the Class Day exercises, which were begun in the auditorium, but completed on the college campus when the Ivy oration was delivered. The Commencement address, by George H. Combs, of Kansas City, was an eloquent plea for the right education of young women. Along with the great visions, Mr. Combs emphasized the ability to cook as being one of the qualifications of the real twentieth century woman. He was very much surprised and very much delighted when Mrs. W. T. Moore, president of the college, in distributing medals won by different young ladies, gave out one to a girl who had shown her special ability over her sister students in the domestic science department. Some dozen gold medals were awarded. Miss Mae Wonsettler was valedictorian, and Miss Emma McKennon the salutatorian. C. H. Winders, president of the Board of Trustees, presented diplomas to eighteen academic students and six in special departments.

Southern Christian Institute.

Another school year at the Southern Christian Institute, Edwards, Miss., has just closed. It has been, perhaps, the best year in the history of the school. The exercises of the week began with the baccalaureate sermon, by President Lehman. His subject was "Moses and His Rod." Tuesday evening occurred the alumni program; Wednesday forenoon the workers' conference. W. H. Alphin, of Waco, Tex., was elected chairman and Brother Bostick, of Arkansas, secretary. Brother Parsons, of Jefferson City, Mo., delivered the principal address. At the conclusion of the conference a permanent organization was effected. Wednesday afternoon the farmers' meeting and industrial exhibit was held. Supt. Prout delivered a very thoughtful and helpful address. It was a great pleasure to the teachers, students and friends to have the following well-known gentlemen on the program: Col. Hooker, who represented this district in Congress for more than twenty years; Col. Montgomery, who was a candidate for the nomination of governor of this state. It was a matter of more than usual note that Mr. Hume, who used to be overseer on this plantation before the war, was present and appeared upon the platform. All these men bore testimony to the efficiency of the great work that is being done here for the uplifting of the negro race. In the industrial display all the departments were represented, but those of the culinary, sewing, laundry, shop, farm and printing office attracted the largest number of people.

Thursday morning was the school exhibition. This consisted of recitations, essays, music and drills, given by under-graduates. Thursday afternoon the graduating exercises took place. Chapel hall was packed to the doors and a large number could not get in. After the exercises were through the people out upon the campus looked more like a Fourth of July crowd than anything else, and yet a more orderly set your writer has never seen. There is a dawn of a new era in negro education. At the educational conference the negro leaders themselves said, "Education is our only hope." Bro. C. C. Smith is doing a splendid service on the field, President Lehman is managing wisely at the school, the C. W. B. M. is nobly standing by the work and the negroes are beginning to arouse themselves to the greatness of their opportunities.—T. M. Burgess.

West Kentucky College.

The Commencement of West Kentucky College, just closed, was the most successful in the history of the college. Sixteen young men and women graduated, and the prospects for the school are brighter than ever before. The address of J. J. Castleberry, of Union City, Tenn., before the graduating class, was one of the ablest and most appropriate the writer has ever heard, and showed him to be one of the strongest young men in our ministry.

The college has just secured $9,000 in gifts and pledges, and a vigorous campaign for funds is being organized. It is proposed to double our equipment and facilities for work in the next two years. The contribution of the school to our centennial movement is to be the doubling of its power for good. A new dormitory for boys will be the first new building erected.

Two scholarships for young Bible students have been endowed. These scholarships carry with them board and tuition, and will be given to the most worthy applicants.—G. A. Lewellen.

William Woods College.

The sixteenth annual commencement of this institution was a complete success in every respect. Beginning with the usual musical recitals through the various exercises to the awarding of medals the interest and the size of the audiences increased. The baccalaureate address, by J. M. Philputt, was a model in simplicity and directness. The address to under-graduates, by M. A. Hart, was well received. The essays and papers were all of a high order. The department of cooking was voted a success, after the directors and their wives had eaten dinner prepared by the students. The art department received many encomiums by those who saw the display. The programs, disclosing training and thorough preparation of the pupils in expression, piano and voice culture, worked special praise from the press.

Many visitors were in attendance, among them Dr. Woods, Mr. and Mrs. J N. Ruby and daughter, his son-in-law and grand-daughter. All regretted the absence of Mrs. Woods, on account of sickness. During the past year Dr. Woods' generosity has abundantly supplied the needs of the school. The visions of the past are becoming glorious realities. William Woods College has conquered the obstacles that stood in its path. It looks out hopefully into an enlarging future. The enrollment of the past year is the largest in its history. The capacity of the buildings were taxed, but when the auditorium is completed and other contemplated improvements crown the close of 1906, ample space will be found for the full equipment of the school. Standing as it does for helpfulness to dependent young women, this institution has the right to rejoice in the fact that more than fifty girls have been helped in their education this year.

This educational plant, sustained by the liberality of Dr. Woods, other friends and the generous support of the churches and their preachers, upon whom it must rely, is destined to grow into greater usefulness as the years go by. The motto for the year closing May 24 was, "Be ye also enlarged." Forty graduates received diplomas from the various departments. Twenty-two in the literary department and the remainder were from the schools of piano, voice, expression and shorthand and typewriting. The management was delighted with the year's work. The address to the graduates was made by D. H. Harris, a resident attorney, and it was replete with wisdom happily expressed and graciously received.—J. B. Jones.

Hamilton College.

The thirty-seventh session of Hamilton College came to a close with a brilliant Commencement program the night of May 24. This splendid institution for the education of young women began its career (then Hocker College) under the able leadership of the revered Robert Graham, and has maintained, from the first, its position as a leading school in the Southwest.

The baccalaureate sermon, by Rev. Hugh McLellan, of Richmond, Kentucky, was one of the finest pulpit addresses ever heard in Lexington. His subject was "Mountain and Plain in Scriptural History," and in the logic of thought, and in purity and beauty of expression the sermon was compared to the efforts of Dr. Henry Van Dyke on baccalaureate occasions. The processional by the college choir, the solo and quartette singing were of high excellence. The large art class made a fine annual exhibit, and proved the splendid equipment of the instructor, Miss Mary Wynn Shackleford. The School of Music has done notably good work, and the annual concert was appreciated by one of the largest audiences during the week. The graduating recital of Misses Dryden and Ashbrook and the presentation at the opera house of Edmond Rostand's charming classic, "The Romancers," by the Marlowe Club, were expressions of the splendid work done in the School of Oratory.

The Class day program was replete with wit, raillery and sentiment, from the singing of the class song to the planting of the ivy, followed by a Senior dinner in the college dining-room.

The high-water mark of interest was reached in the Commencement exercises, held in Morrison Chapel Thursday night, May 24, the historic old building being crowded to the doors. The processional of twenty academic graduates, the president of Hamilton, Mrs. Luella W. St. Clair, Bro. Homer Wilson, the speaker of the evening, Prof. A. R. Milligan, of Kentucky University, Bro. T. W. Grafton, of Indiana, who offered the invocation, and the entire body of the Board of Trustees, occupied seats on the platform. The vocal and piano music was all furnished by college talent, the quartette and chorus being especially applauded. The address was entitled "The Power of the 'I Will,'" and was strong, forcible and earnest. The program closed with a talk by Mrs. St. Clair, who awarded ten handsome gold medals in the different departments, and presented certificates to two graduates in the School of Oratory, and diplomas to twenty academic graduates.

The growth of the college under the administration of Mrs. St. Clair has been most gratifying, the enrollment during the past year having been two hundred and fifty, from eighteen states and one foreign country. Year by year this institution under her supervision is growing in public favor, and taking higher rank in the mental and moral accomplishment of its students. The splendid characteristics of this good and wise woman are being impressed upon the minds and hearts of the young women who are placed in her care. Knowing, as the writer does, the internal discipline of the school, he can most cordially recommend Hamilton College to all who desire the inculcation of thorough instruction and high ideals in their children or wards.—John S. Shouse.

Dedications.

Groveland, Kan.

We have dedicated the first church in the village of Groveland. The writer, pastor at McPherson, has been for two years preaching at the school house each alternate Sunday afternoon, and I organized a congregation March 22. At once the brethren set to work to move a building owned by a congregation that used to worship three miles west, but which has disbanded several years ago. The project was successfully carried out, $300 spent on the building, and now there is a neat little chapel in the village which is the pride of the entire neighborhood. I had charge of the dedication. The house was far too small for those desiring to attend. All bills are paid and $25 left in the treasury. A full board of officers will be duly installed. I preached also Sunday evening and the following three evenings, and we had three additions. Two were added at McPherson Sunday morning.—W. A. Morrison.

Okmulgee, I. T.

One of the best buildings in the territory has been dedicated. I was assisted by other ministers of the town, and Bro. George H. Farley, of Muskogee, also graced the morning service by his presence. The building is as nearly complete in its furnishings as can be, everything to give beauty, neatness and convenience having been provided. Besides auditorium, there is a study, kindergarten room, baptistry, robing rooms and vestibule, and accommodation for 350 people. All the cost was provided for, so that the church is in splendid condition for work. There is perfect peace and harmony.—F. L. VanVoorhis.

Dewy, Kan.

L. L. Carpenter recently dedicated the new church at Dewy, near Smith Center, Kan. It was announced in the morning that we would have to raise $1,300 and at the close of the afternoon service the gifts amounted to $1,525, so that the building was formally set apart to the service of God. This was Brother Carpenter's 668th dedication. He says he does not know why he is in the work of church dedication, for he does not like it, and it is the hardest work that a man can do. We suggested to him that it was because he knew how to do it, and the brethren have found this out. May he be spared to us many years! The Dewy Church is the direct result of the missionary labors of the ministers of the Smith Center Church, namely, Brethren Drummond, Menzies, Harding and myself, who have been with them only about six months. The church departments are full of life. The Smith Center Church contributed $165 up to May 17 for missions.—F. E. Blanchard.

Los Angeles, Cal.

The Boyle Heights brethren dedicated their new tabernacle May 20; C. C. Chapman, who was master of ceremonies, succeeded in raising $2,400, which practically clears the property of all debt. Brother Chapman is becoming quite a church dedicator in California, and has proved a great success. The building and its furnishing cost nearly $3,000, and the whole property is now valued at about $6,000. The Tabernacle is meant for a temporary building, and will, in time, give place to a permanent structure. It will seat about 400 and serves the purpose of the brethren very nicely for the present. The church is only a little over two years old and has a membership of 150. We are now in a meeting, with H. E. Wilhite preaching. Sumner T. Martin was with us the first week. Ten have been added to date, and the prospects are good.—Walter L. Martin, Minister.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Long Beach, Cal., June 10.—Twenty-three added to-day; 123 in eleven days. E. W. Thornton is a loyal, whole-souled co-worker.—Charles Reign Scoville.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Jefferson City, Mo., June 11.—Meeting one week old; fifty additions; thirty-eight one day; 150 in chorus; the tabernacle seating 1,500 was packed and hundreds stood in the street. Widger is the pastor.—Wilson and Lint.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Nashville, Tenn., June 11.—Tent meeting continues with great interest and large audiences; ninety added in three weeks. One thousand heard the sermon on "Christian Union" last night. Howard Patterson and R. Lin Cave are co-operating; we are continuing but go to Madisonville, Ky., in July.—Small and St. John, evangelists.

Arkansas.

Fayetteville, June 7.—Six added this week—3 by confession, 3 by letter.—N. M. Ragland.

Prairie Grove.—The most successful series of evangelistic meetings ever held in this town has just been concluded by W. S. Buchanan, assisted by B. H. Gardner, as singer. Extending over four weeks there were 71 conversions, all but three of these uniting with our congregation. In September, 1904, the church consisted of but 25 members, who called a preacher who was aided by the state board. They grew in numbers until some 125 additions were made, but the number was constantly reduced by removals until the congregation numbered about 70. We rented a tent and hauled it across the mountains. The evangelists led the campaign in such a way as to inspire the whole membership with a desire to win souls. They have added to the membership and edified the people.—H. S. Mobley, Minister.

California.

San Bernardino.—Brother Scoville being delayed, H. E. Wilhite, the pastor, assisted by P. H. Kendall and his wife, began a meeting here on Easter Sunday and had added 57 when the evangelist arrived, May 11. In two weeks and four days, under Brother Scoville's marvelous leadership, the total additions reached 179, about 130 being confessions. Considering the local conditions the result is marvelous. The pastor resigned just before Brother Scoville reached the city, and in the midst of the meeting he left to begin his work as evangelist in a meeting in the Boyle Heights Church, Los Angeles. I came in as temporary supply toward the close of the meeting. Had we been able to continue results must have been much greater, for more than 40 came forward the last two days. But Brother Scoville had engaged for a meeting at Long Beach, where he has had 66 additions in the first five days. He and the Kendalls came back here last night to attend a reception to the new members, when 11 more adults joined the Lord's host, and the new members enlisted nobly for work, and pledged liberally toward the financial support of the church. Brother Scoville is to return next week.—Sumner T. Martin.

Idaho.

Meridian, May 31.—Twenty-two added to date; will organize June 6, but continue meeting until June 17.—George C. Ritchey, State Evangelist.

Roseberry, May 27.—Our work is doing nicely; 1 baptism recently.—H. C. Varner.

Illinois.

Green Pond, June 4.—Ten confessions yesterday.—Thomas H. Popplewell.

Fairbury, June 4.—There have been 16 additions during the past few weeks.—L. B. Pickerill.

Indiana.

Noblesville, Jun e4.—I closed a meeting at Seymour, with 34 added. The Bible school attendance was doubled, all expenses met, and a class organized for Bible study. The church is in excellent condition. Harley Jackson is the pastor.—E. B. Barnes.

New Albany, June 6.—Sixteen added since last report—7 by confession, 9 by letter and statement.—B. F. Cato.

Radcliffe's Grove, June 9.—Four added by confession in a short meeting.—A. W. Crabb, Brazil, Indiana.

Kentucky.

Owensboro, June 6.—One addition recently.—R. H. Crossfield.

Louisiana.

Shreveport, June 2.—Our tent and tabernacle meetings closed with 110 added. Evangelists Spicer and Douthit and my brother, Arthur W. Jones, and Prof. Talmage Stanley, were the two teams which led in the work. It was a glorious victory.—Claude L. Jones.

Michigan.

Saginaw, June 4.—There were 10 additions yesterday—9 by confession and 1 by letter.—J. Murray Taylor.

Missouri.

Brunswick, June 4.—Two added yesterday by letter.—E. H. Williamson.

Flat River, June 7.—Six added since last report—5 by confession and 1 by statement.—C. E. Dunkleberger.

Paris, June 8.—Our meeting, conducted by the Brooks brothers, closed with 84 additions—62 by confession. Nearly every member of two Sunday-school classes united with the church. The splendid work of our Junior Endeavor and Bible school was evident throughout. The services are reverential, cultivate a desire for a holy life and are helpful to the church.—J. H. Wright,

Windsor, June 8.—Closed a meeting of two and a half weeks with 23 additions, 16 by confession and baptism. The meeting was conducted by home forces, with the exception of the capable assistance of Bro. L. D. Sprague, of California, Mo., who had charge of the singing. Windsor Church joins the honor roll of the Missouri churches by giving $100 to the permanent state fund. Our work here is in excellent condition.—W. A. Fite.

Nebraska.

Nelson.—Four additions and two more to come by letter next Lord's day.—F. E. Day.

New Mexico.

Las Vegas, June 2.—Meeting five weeks old. In spite of all difficulties we have a membership of about 60 at present. We expect to effect a permanent organization, and hope within a few weeks to have a minister on the ground. We will continue several nights and then go to Silver City, N. M., to organize a church. We will want a good man to take the work at Silver City about July 1. Arthur Wake, my soloist, is a great help to me.—John T. Stivers.

Ohio.

Collinwood, June 4.—Two confessions yesterday.—M. L. Buckley.

Oklahoma.

Enid, June 4.—Twelve added recently—5 by confession.—Scott Anderson.

Mrs. Martin (of Seattle) will meet me at the Grand Canon of the Colorado, and together we shall visit some places of interest for a little rest and recreation.—S. M. Martin.

Beaumont, June 7.—The meeting conducted by Bro. S. M. Martin has closed. I never had the privilege of listening to a more wholesome and full presentation of the Gospel than is given by Brother Martin. We have been greatly helped. ### THE SEASIDE PARABLES.—Mark 4:1-32.

"Sow in the morn thy seed,
  At even hold not thy hand;
To doubt and fear give thou no heed,
  Broadcast it o'er the land.

"And duly shall appear,
  In verdure, beauty, strength,
The tender blade, the stalk, the ear,
  And the full corn at length."

If Jesus has dawned upon our souls we should be lamps and doing a lamp's part in the dispelling of the night settling down upon the race. We who have seen Jesus are at fault if we do not lend a ray to lighten another's pathway. Neither do lamps impair their light by lighting other lamps. It should be part of our mission to enkindle other luminaries all along our pathway through the years and leave an ever lengthening trail of light behind us.

Church statistics grow as the mustard seed. One room would have held the disciples of Jesus while Joseph's tomb held him. But by the end of the first century there were 500,000 Christians, 50,000,000 at the close of the tenth, 100,000,000 at the end of the fifteenth, there were 200,000,000 at the passing of the eighteenth, and now in the morning of the twentieth there are 350,000,000 who have coronated Jesus as Lord of all and the real growth of the kingdom seems only beginning.

Familiarity with "short cuts" to wealth, education and social prominence has made many impatient with the orderly development of spiritual culture. They want the peace of the Gospel before repentance, they expect its joy before faith, and are disappointed because divine approval does not precede sacrifice. They anticipate the fruits of the Gospel without doing the preliminary works. But the great law Jesus taught beside the sea still obtains—there is first the blade, then the corn, then the full corn in the ear.

It is the law. "For he that hath, to him shall be given; and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath." The successful mariner seeks not to change the gale but trims his sails to the breeze, and inventors who lift burdens from men's shoulders to unfeeling machines recognize and honor the great laws of nature. Neither should we consume time and energy in vainly protesting against this spiritual law, but seek to augment our spiritual acquisitions under the inspiration of this law that guarantees to us that the more we get the more easily shall we procure still greater spiritual riches.

The prayer-meeting is a time for personal heart searching. Our hearts are fields in which have been sown the seeds of the Gospel. Did those seeds fall among thorns where cares of the world choked them? Did fleeting secular excitements come like birds and pluck them out before they grew? Did they fall into shallow hearts, where uncovered by appreciation and meditation, under the glare of worldly ambitions they were burned out ere we felt their precious weight of gold? Or are we conscious that in heaven our hearts are accounted good ground and the Master rejoicing as he sees them bearing a harvest of thirty, sixty or a hundred fold for the blessing of man? Scientific culture of soils has done much to make desert places bloom like the rose, but greater transformations may be effected in these spiritual fields. Let us supply fallow ground for the development of this Gospel sowing.

There is no censure expressed for the sower because some seeds fell in other than the best soil. And as we go forth sowing the seeds of the kingdom we, too, must sow wherever we go. There is no need of parsimony in sowing, for the seed basket is miraculously replenished as was the widow's measure of meal. There will be a constant temptation to guard against "scattering pearls before swine," and to reserve all our efforts against the time we may sow when prospects are good for returns of thirty and sixty and a hundred fold. But there is that in sowing and good tillage that improves the soil and at least prepares it for future sowers. The stony places will only become gardens and wheat billows roll over the thorn wastes through the activities of venturesome husbandmen. Let us sow amidst thorns and stones rather than not sow, improve our fields as best we may, and in the harvest home of time from some fields we'll find the angels have harvested for us an eternal inheritance.

SECOND QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Memory verse, Heb. 2:1.

Golden Text.—Never man spake like this man.—John 7:46.

The period covered by the lessons of the past quarter coincides almost exactly with what is known as the second and third periods of the Galilean ministry. This extends from the calling of the twelve apostles and the Sermon on the Mount until the first retirement into the north, and from that northern journey until the final departure from Galilee for Jerusalem. The first period of the Galilean ministry was in a sense preparatory to the larger work. The Perean ministry, which immediately follows, is the beginning of the end. The ground covered by this quarter's lessons is, therefore, the very heart and center of the ministry of Jesus.

The opening event is the calling of the twelve. Hitherto his following had been somewhat irregular and uncertain. Some of John's disciples had attached themselves to Jesus, and twice he had called a little group of men to follow him. But these had only been probationary invitations. Now the twelve are chosen for intimate and constant fellowship. They are to be first disciples, then apostles; first to learn, then to be sent forth.

In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus laid down the fundamental principles of his new kingdom of righteousness and love. The precepts of that wonderful discourse have, therefore, a larger value than that of mere isolated maxims for the conduct of life. Many of its sentences are as crisp and pithy as proverbs, but it is no mere proverbial philosophy that is here presented. It is a coherent and consistent system of principles, by the inculcation and application of which he proposes to revolutionize the world by establishing a new relation between God and man.

The incidents of the second lesson belong properly before the Sermon on the Mount. They illustrate the low esteem in which Jesus held the mere formal observance of traditional religious usages, and the very high estimate which he placed upon man and all that made for his welfare.

A preaching tour through Galilee gave opportunity for several works of mercy and healing, among which the healing of the centurian's servant and the raising of the son of the widow at Nain are recorded. The homage of the sinful woman who anointed the feet of Jesus as he sat at the table of Simon the Pharisee, showed Jesus' tolerance for penitent sinners, however unrespectable they might be, and his disapproval of self-righteousness and self-sufficiency, however respectable it might be.

The group of parables spoken by the Sea of Galilee embody in concrete form the teaching of Jesus about the kingdom of God. They should be read in connection with the Sermon on the Mount. The latter states the principles of the kingdom; the former illustrates its relation to the life of man and the method of its operation.

The healing of the Gadarene demoniac is the most striking and remarkable case of the overcoming of the disorder of mind and body which was described as demoniacal possession.

The death of John the Baptist was perhaps a warning to Jesus of his impending fate. It closed the career of the great prophet who appreciated the mission of Jesus but seemed unable to cooperate fully with him in the fulfillment of it. Perhaps if he had lived to see the end of Jesus' ministry he would have become a more active ally. As it was, his work was the negative one of clearing the ground and preparing the way.

The feeding of the five thousand is one of the relatively small but highly important group of miracles, showing control over inanimate nature. It brought the popularity of Jesus to its highest point—too high a point, in fact, for immediately afterward he found it necessary deliberately to offend the friends who followed him for reasons alien to the real purpose of his ministry. The crisis at Capernaum decimated his following but multiplied his strength.

The incident of the Syrophoenician woman's daughter, during the northern journey, gives a faint foreshadowing of the universality of the Gospel. Peter's confession explicitly states and clinches what had been accomplished thus far in the education of the twelve—the acceptance of the fact that Jesus was the Messiah. They had already shown their personal allegiance to him by remaining faithful when others were going away. Peter's reply (John 6:68) to the question, "Will ye also go away?" was in reality a part of his great confession. It was the assurance of personal discipleship which is as essential as the confession of the Messiahship of Jesus.

The transfiguration was a justification and verification of the Messiahship which Peter had confessed, and an encouragement to the faith of the disciples, in view of the strain which was so soon to be put upon it by the suffering and death of Jesus and the apparent end of his mission.

Shortly after this, following the discourse about humility (given in the next lesson), and perhaps a brief journey to Jerusalem to the feast of Tabernacles, Jesus left Galilee for the last time and began the circuitous journey through Perea, east of Jordan, which finally brought him to Jerusalem for the Passover and his own death.

JOHN ELIOT AND MISSIONS AMONG THE INDIANS.—2 Tim. 2:1-13.

"He was so generous that the parish treasurer, paying him his salary, tied it in a handkerchief with as many knots as possible to prevent his giving it away before he reached home. Meeting a case of poverty, and trying in vain to undo the knots, he said, 'Here, my friend, take it; I believe heaven designs it all for you.'"

We are apt to think of one working with such deadly earnestness as he as becoming severe, ungracious and difficult to approach, but it is related of him that he was greatly beloved because of his pure life and gentle manners in village homes and Indian huts. He died in Roxbury, where he had labored for 60 years. His death was lamented throughout New England as a public calamity.

Think of John Eliot's doing missionary work four miles from Boston! Electric cars flash along his lonely paths and towers and spires rise higher than those primeval forests, but higher still are many he redeemed and swifter their flight amidst the glories of heaven. Nearer than four miles from our city halls are as great conquests awaiting our making as ever enlisted the consecrated powers of this great colonial. Lord, give us willingness!

John Eliot was born in England in 1604, and graduated from Cambridge University in 1623. He was ordained to the ministry and entered upon it—not as a career, but as a life. Doing good as he found it, led him into lonely forests and the squalor of Indian camps—paths apparently leading to certain obscurity. If he ever longed for fame, does not his biography illustrate the truth of the dictum, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you?"

The biography of John Eliot, "the apostle to the American Indians," constitutes an important chapter in the history of modern missions—"the new Acts of Apostles." For sixty years he endured hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, of many a Pequot he made a bronze image of the true "great Father," and in many a dusky bosom he implanted hope of life and immortality. He died at the age of 86, working for the betterment of the Indians till the very last. Seeing death coming he exclaimed, "Welcome!" Realizing its significance, he shouted "Joy!"

Paul writes Timothy: "The husbandman that laboreth must be first partaker of the fruits." For how much then must one of these missionary heroes be thankful who has foretasted the joys of salvation that have thrilled the hearts of all who have put on Christ under his direct ministry, as well as all those who have come into the knowledge of Christ through influences he has set in motion! Life to them is a glorious sowing time and full of great expectations. No wonder they wish to live to the last day possible, even while preparing others for their dying.

The literary achievements alone of John Eliot entitle him to a place in our hall of fame. He translated into the Indian dialect the ten commandments, the Lord's' prayer, and many other texts of Scripture. He published an Indian catechism, and a tract containing a statement of the belief and experience of his converts. He translated for the Indians the New Testament in 1661 and the Old in 1663. His Indian Grammar Begun, printed in 1666, was reprinted in 1822. A copy of his Indian Primer (1669) is still preserved in the University of Edinburgh. He published also Indian Dialogues and many treatises in English. At the conclusion of his Indian Grammar he writes, "Prayers and pains through faith in Jesus Christ will do anything."

[Notices of Deaths, not more than four lines, inserted free. Obituary memoirs, one cent per word. Send the money with the copy.]

BOULTON.

Roberta Davis Boulton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Boulton, residing near Caldwell, Idaho, of whooping cough. Her last days were a benediction to those who attended by her side, so dear and patient was she. B. W. Rice.

BROWN.

On May 17, 1906, near Kensington, Kan., Joseph Brown. The Bible and the church were his joy. He loved God and his fellowmen. The world is better for his life. Melvin R. Hobbs.

BROWN.

Martha Jane Jared was born in Warren county, Ill., August 26, 1835. She moved to Mabaska county, Ia., in 1844, and was married to Hamilton Brown, April 19, 1855. Of this union three children were born. She became a Christian in July, 1857, under the preaching of Eleazer Snodgrass, one of the pioneer Disciple preachers of the state. She remained through life a member of the same congregation—the Indianapolis Church. She was a devoted wife and mother, and a faithful friend. She died at the old home place where her father entered the land, May 17, aged 70 years, 8 months and 22 days. Her husband, three children, eight grand-children and one great-grandchild mourn her departure. Hers is the first death in the family circle. The funeral services were held from the Wymore Church, on Saturday, May 19. The sermon was preached by Elder B. W. Pettitt, his subject being "A Christian Warfare." Her son Bruce, who is now pastor of one of our strong churches in Mansfield, Ohio, was present to mingle his tears with those of the father and two other sons, Reed and Jaired. Mother Brown was always devoted to her home; her strength was largely spent in beautifying and happifying it. She was uncommonly tender, yet strong in her attachments for her husband and children. She was loyal to what she believed was right and, therefore, like Paul, she had fought a good fight and was not afraid to die. She gave to the world one strong Gospel preacher and two splendid schoolteachers in the gift of her three sons. Blessings on her memory.

CANFIELD.

Mrs. Eliza Josephine Bower Canfield was born in Clark county, Ind., June 27., 1837, and departed this life April 30, 1906, on the forty-third anniversary of her marriage to J. N. Canfield. Three of their four children survive. At the age of 14 she united with the church in a meeting held by her grandfather, Adam Hostettler, and Peter Hon. In 1870 Brother Canfield and family moved to Indianapolis, where they have since resided. Here he has done a great work in planting churches and evangelizing. In all his labors he has had the helpful sympathy and support of his wife. She loved the cause of the Master with a great love. Her life was simple, her faith was strong. She was a noble type of the faithful, far-sighted and patient wife and mother, without hypocrisy and without guile. Her last illness was protracted, and her suffering intense, but she bore her affliction with fortitude and without complaint. Allan B. Philputt.

CHAFFEE.

Newton Minace Chaffee, born at Attica, N. Y., March 10, 1846, died at his home in Cheney, Wash., April 15, 1906. He became a member of the Christian Church at Eldora, Ia., in the early '70s, and was baptized by J. C. Hay. He lived a consistent Christian life, and leaves, besides his wife, three sisters, one brother and many friends to mourn. I conducted the funeral services from the home, assisted by the local lodge of the I. O. O. F. W. S. Lemmon, Pastor Central Christian Church, Spokane, Wash.

CUNNINGHAM.

William J. Cunningham, born at Columbus, O., June 28, 1830, died at his home in Bentonville, Ark., April 2, 1906. He became a Christian in 1852, married Mary A. Dickinson, of Illinois, in 1851, and through faithful service was held in the highest esteem by all good citizens and sadly missed from the church. He loved his Bible. He was a strength to the church, devoted to righteousness and the truth. A great throng attended the funeral services, which I conducted.

Bentonville, Ark. J. W. Ellis.

HAYWARD.

One of the saddest and most largely attended funerals ever held in Atlantic, Ia., was that of Mitchell Hayward, who was killed suddenly, May 10, by a railroad train. His funeral was held in the Christian Church. He leaves a wife, four children, an aged mother, six brothers and two sisters. A host of friends mourn with the grief-stricken family. W. D. Crewdson.

HOLMS.

Elizabeth Holms died at Howard, Kan., at the age of 88 years. Baptized by William Rogers, she had been a faithful member in the Christian Church for sixty-five years. When the weather would permit she walked four blocks to church. J. M. Plummer.

INMAN.

The funeral of Colby Banton Inman, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Inman, was conducted by Rev. D. H. Hotchkiss, of the Methodist Episcopal mission, assisted by William G. Ireland. The burial was in Carmen Cemetery, Monterey, Mex. Many friends will sympathize with the parents in the loss of their first born. Jasper T. Moses.

MARSHALL.

"Uncle Than," as Natnaniel Marshall was always called, passed away May 9, 1906, at the age of 78 years and 8 months. He was one of God's noblemen, caring more for nature than for money. He loved his church and supported it liberally, and everybody loved him. He will be greatly missed in Augusta township, Ohio, where I was called to officiate at the funeral. The church was filled by those who came to pay their last respects to the dead. His wife preceded him April 5, 1888, and his son William died in his babyhood.

Coshocton, Ohio. J. N. Johnston.

M'DOUGALL.

Rosella L. McDougall, who resided with her daughter, Mrs. E. R. Rice, of Medina, Ohio, entered into rest May 31, at the age of 87 years and 10 months. She was the widow of Dougall McDougall, who was prominently identified with the work of the Disciples on the Western Reserve. Mrs. McDougall had been a member of the Disciples' Church for nearly seventy years, and had lived a patient, unassuming life of devotion and trust. She was the mother of six children—Elliott McDougall, of Medina, Ohio.; Mrs. E. R. Rice, of the same place; Mrs. Mary Harris, of Sheridan, Okla.; Mrs. Lucia Richard, of Chatham, Ohio, now deceased, and Mrs. Ella Woodruff, of Des Moines, Ia. For the past twelve years Mrs. McDougall has made her home with Mrs. Rice. She has been very feeble for many years and sixteen weeks before her death she accidentally fell, dislocating her hip. Her suffering from that time until her death was intense, but borne with that fortitude and patience which the discipline of years had developed. She was a noble, consecrated Christian woman, and had well earned the rest into which she has at last entered. The funeral services were conducted by the venerable Lathrop Cooley. P. J. Rice.

M'KIM.

Mrs. Thomas McKim, one of the oldest Disciples of Brooks county, W. Pa., has been called home. She united with the church very early in life, under the preaching of old Brother Teagarten. She leaves a husband and two daughters to mourn, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. L. N. D. Wells.

PARKER.

J. F. M. Parker was born September 16, 1838, in Knox county, Ohio. He died March 13, 1906, at Galesburg, Ill., and was buried beside his wife, who had preceded him there ten years, in the cemetery at Putnam, Ill., amid the deep sorrow of the community whose hurts he had helped to heal through many years of patient, gentle ministry. Brother Parker was married to Mary Amy Wherry, daughter of Elder John Wherry, May 6, 1863, and of the family of ten children six are now living, with residence at Galesburg, Ill., and were with their father when he departed. The family life of the deceased was one of strong attachments, and very happy. The rich, pure faith of Brother Parker made him a man who loved his Lord, his home, his children and his country. Expressive of both his faith in God and of the pleasure he took in his family, he once said to me: "Brother Brown, God has been good to me. I haven't a bad boy or a bad girl—they are all Christians, with no evil habits; and two of my boys are preaching the Gospel of Christ." The active ministry of Brother Parker began in 1857, when he was but 19 years of age, and extended over a period of about forty-five years. He was instrumental in organizing and building up the church at Putnam, and preached extensively in Central and Northern Illinois. Among his pastorates were Milo, Whitefield, New Bedford, Toluca and Palestine. For several years he served as state evangelist in Minnesota where his heroic ministry was fruitful of results that remain to this day. The Parker home was never without the church papers and many vigorous articles have appeared in their columns from the pen of the deceased. He read extensively, and pondered much the great themes of the faith of which he loved to talk. Brother Parker's education was procured in the public schools of Beardstown, Ill., supplemented with work at Berean Christian College at Jacksonville, Ill. The foundation of his ministry and effective pulpit work was in a private and independent study of the New Testament with which he filled his mind, his heart, and which accounts for his noble life. He knew from personal experience that his Redeemer lives and the holy communion he had with him was, to his mind, the ultimate witness of God that man has a Savior. This aspect of his religious life is well illustrated by an utterance of his under the burden of the greatest sorrow of his life. Within eleven months Brother Parker lost a son, a daughter, his farm and his wife, yet as he stood beside the casket of his deceased wife, whose life had been one with his own, crushed as it might seem by the weight of this crowning affliction, he looked into the face of his dead and in the presence of his weeping children, said: "I know him whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." This was like "learning obedience from the things which he suffered." It was a beautiful faith, and his neighbors believed in his life—there was nothing else to do. A family of children need no other legacy of a father.

Galesburg, Ill. Nelson G. Brown.

PARKS.

Miss Muriel, daughter of our Brother Parks, died at her home, May 14, 1906, aged 13 years. She was an amiable child, loved by all. She is now united with her mother, who died two years ago. J. W. Ellis.

Bentonville, Ark.

POWELL.

James L. and Rebecca J. Powell, husband and wife, died within one week, near Peck, Idaho. Both were faithful members of the church. James L. Powell died March 25, 1906, aged 87 years, 8 months and 20 days. He spent the greater part of his life in Davis county, Mo. Rebecca J. Powell died of consumption six days before, aged 43 years, 9 months and 5 days. Mrs. L. O. Routh.

WITHINGTON.

E. T. Withington, one of the faithful officers of the church at Charleston, S. C., has passed away. He was greatly loved by all who knew him.

Charles E. Smith.

SONG FOR THE TOILERS.

BY CHARLES BLANCHARD.

Who thinks of the bird or the blossom in November?
Only those who toil does the old world care to remember,
And that not long.
The world does not care much for the Singer
Or his song!

Yet is my song for the toilers, though the Singer die unknown:
I bid you go toil in triumph, while I suffer here alone—
It is not long!
And what if at last the world shall remember the Singer
For his Song?

PART II.

CHAPTER IX.

Nelsie Loraine had grown so used to marvels, that she no longer wondered, when they tramped on and on in the attic of the Hands' House. The hallway they entered after leaving the Conundrum Chamber seemed to have no end. Its sides changed from pink to blue and then to white. The fact is, it was so artfully arranged, that by moving various flaps which seemed as solid as the rest of the walls of cloth, Raymund led them over a great deal of the same space they had already traversed. At last, however, he said, "We have now come to the Music palace."

"I am glad of that," said Mrs. De Fer, "for I seemed to have walked two miles!" A curtain was moved aside and they entered the Palace. Its properties that associated it with other palaces were entirely vested in its name. Here, however, was a homemade bench upon which Raymund, Nelsie Loraine and Mrs. De Fer seated themselves. Jack sat down upon the muslin carpet opposite them and took up a guitar which lay ready. "You will now," Jack Bellfield announced, "hear one of the wittiest songs of the day, as rendered by a singer of great renown, and some reputation." He evidently meant himself, for he began strumming upon the strings. Raymund set his lantern upon the floor in such a way that its light showed Nelsie Loraine to charming effect, as well as the singer. Jack sang:

"Once upon a time there was a man
And he had no hair on his head,
So he took the smallpox to make it break out
And now that man is dead."

"Once upon a time there was a chicken,
But it didn't have a single feather;
So it never would come out of its egg
For fear 'twould be exposed to the weather."

"Poor chicken!" murmured Nelsie Loraine. "I wonder what ever became of it?"

"It never became anything," said Jack. "That isn't all.

"Once upon a time there was a broom,
But now it's a shattered thing;
It was broken on the man who lives in the house,
And now his wife is king."

"It looks like the song is very disconnected," said Jack, laying down the guitar, "but you see everything is bound together by 'Once upon a time.' Now, that is all." Jack rose and all clapped.

"We will next," said Raymund, "visit the Chained Lion and the Distortion Room and get that part over as soon as possible, so we can take our refreshments in the dining-room-in-the-air. Jack can't sing any more because there isn't time. He could keep that up all night." Raymund was as proud of Jack's gifts as if they were his own.

The Den of the Chained Lion brought forth exclamations of surprise. In the middle of the room was a lake at least three feet by five, with grassy sides; the grass effectually hid the rusty edges of the tin tank. "It's sure enough water," said Raymund, throwing in a pebble to show that it could splash. Near the margin of the lake was anchored a little shingle-boat. A little back was a cave of black cambric, and at the mouth of the cave lay Houndpup, chained to the very rock that had proved so inefficient in the case of Prometheus. He was thoroughly subdued, no doubt as a result of being hoisted up to the attic, and with tail curled under him and eyes dumbly beseeching, he whined plaintively to be delivered from his part of the drama. "Houndpup doesn't act much better than Tom," Jack commented. "But, say! wasn't the Vulture great!" He began to laugh, which so encouraged the lion that he leaped up and started forward. His forepaws splashed into the lake and there was such a precipitate retreat that the walls were almost wrecked. The Distortion Room proved to be a small rounded chamber in which hung two mirrors, one elongating whoever looked into it, and the other widening the spectator in the most ridiculous manner.

"Everything is now over," said Raymund, when they had laughed till they were tired, "except the Dining-room-in-the-air. Come!" They entered the longest passageway yet, which opened into all the others, but dodged all the rooms at convenient corners, before any one could suspect they were going over old ground. At last, they came to a wall of white cotton cloth which Raymund triumphantly drew to one side. They saw before them a circular apartment, with flooring only laid about the sides; the middle of the floor was unfinished. They could look right down into the room below; it was the same from which they had been pulled up. Resting on the edges of the upper room were four chairs and a little table, to all of which heavy ropes were fastened. Raymund blew upon a whistle and then pushed the chairs off the floor so that they hung in space.

"Be seated, everybody," he said, setting the example by carefully getting into one of the chairs. "There isn't the least danger; you can't tip over, and Tom and Fred won't let go of us. There are no stair-steps in this house, as the attic is never used, so this is the only way down."

A chair swung over an edge of each side of the room. Jack seated himself opposite Raymund, and dangled his legs. "Come on," he said, "this is the best thing of all!"

Nelsie Loraine was quite ready to get into her chair, but Mrs. De Fer did not like the Dining-room-in-the-air. After all she had gone through with, however, she was determined not to spoil the sport of the others, so she gingerly picked her way to one side, sat upon the floor, squirmed her body over into the chair, and clutched the rope with both hands. Raymund then blew a second time upon his whistle. The chairs began slowly to descend, and Mrs. De Fer watched the nearing floor with eager eyes. But when they were half way between floor and ceiling the chairs stopped. They swung slightly to and fro, Raymund facing Jack, and Nelsie Loraine, between the boys, facing Mrs. De Fer.

"Oh, what is the matter?" cried Mrs. De Fer.

"It is all right," said Raymund. "Tom and Fred are tying the ropes. We couldn't slip. We will hang here until we have partaken of our refreshments."

"Couldn't I go on down?" asked Mrs. De Fer timidly. "I do not care to eat anything."

"No," said Raymund, "this is part of the party."

Nelsie Loraine peered down at the cedar hangings with their paper figures of various colors. "It is fine!" she cried, "and it is all so new. But where are the refreshments?"

"They are coming to us through the air," said Jack. Sure enough, the little table was slowly moving upward. The rope was fastened to the upper part of each leg, and ran over a pully nailed in the vortex of the roof. When it was lifted clear of the edge of flooring, the table began to descend, coming down in the center of the square formed by the four chairs. When it was on a level with their elbows Raymund blew his whistle. The table stopped and swayed a little back and forth, just as the occupants of the chairs swayed. On the table was a pitcher, four glasses, four boxes and a little pile of napkins. The table was neatly spread. One box was much larger than the others. Raymund reached slowly forward, opened it and took out four wax candles, blue, red, green and yellow, which he lit and stuck upon the table with the others' help. There were then taken out bright tin pans which were passed about with the napkins. "We didn't have plates," said Raymund, "because we wanted everything unusual. Besides if the table did break—"

"Ah!" cried Mrs. De Fer, nervously. The boxes were opened and candies and nuts and cakes were passed about. From the pitcher was poured lemonade. It was the care of each one to sit as still as possible, for if any one moved, that moved the table and the lemonade threatened to spill from the glasses. The candles made cheerful lights, the gentle rocking motion produced a soothing effect (except to Mrs. De Fer) and the novelty of the Dining-room-in-the-air proved enchanting. They drank the lemonade while each told how good it was. They cracked nuts, they enjoyed the candy. It was a success.

"I never laughed so much in my life," said Nelsie Loraine, "as at this party. I thought I would die when I saw Baby sitting flat on the floor making the thunder; and when Prometheus moved the rock, it nearly killed me. But the Distortion Room was worse. I am aching yet from the way I had to laugh!"

Raymund glowed with pride. "I am so glad," was all he could say. He felt repaid for all his labor.

"Nelsie Loraine," said Jack, "you are not eating at all. Try some of that green and yellow candy. It's lots better than it looks."

"I believe I will!" said Nelsie Loraine. The box containing the sweetened paint thus pointed out, had been pushed over into the middle of the table-in-the-air. Nelsie Loraine daintily reached over with her plump white arm in quest of the confectionery, but just as her fingers were about to select one of the poisonous morsels, the table, without an instant's warning, disappeared from the Dining-room-in-the-air, and struck the floor below with a thud, followed by the writhing, whistling rope which had broken loose from the pulley. The four were left facing each other with blank faces, while far beneath their feet was a crushed mass of candles, candies, nuts, broken glass and rattling tin pans, the whole mass saturated with streaming lemonade. Mrs. De Fer in despair, supposing herself about to go down in the general wreck, had a mad impulse to leap to the floor; but it was soon found that the four chairs were unaffected by the loss of their table-companion. Tom and Fred rushed to the scene of chaos from their mysterious fairyland, and Nelsie Loraine, finding herself safe, began to laugh convulsively. The others imitated her example. The remembrance of how she had been just on the eve of taking her coveted morsel, when the table and all its contents vanished, overwhelmed even the timid French lady. They laughed till the attic, for all its labyrinth, rang with the echo, while Baby from a distance joined in through a mouth gorged with sweets, and Houndpup bayed aloft. Raymund afterward told Jack that he considered the falling of the table the crowning triumph of his birthday party.

For the Sake of Others.

"Once upon a time" there was a little girl with bright blue eyes and sunlight hair, and when people saw her on the street they said, "What a pretty child!" She lived in an elegant mansion, and had all the beautiful toys and costly dresses and bright jewelry her heart could wish, but she was not always happy, for she did not make others about her happy, as she was selfish.

In the same city there was another little girl, who had a wealth of black hair and brown eyes and rosy lips and cheeks. She lived in a good, comfortable home, and had nice clothes and all the jewelry and toys that her parents thought best for her to enjoy and yet be unselfish and thoughtful of others.

There was still another little girl in that city. Her home was tumble-down and neglected; her face was pale, and her eyes often had a sad, longing look. She did not have nice dresses, nor dolls that could go to sleep, and sometimes she went to sleep hungry and cold, for her family was very poor. One day this little girl, whose name was Sallie Wrench, went home from school, and said: "Mamma, I just hate that Gladys Cowen, for she is always showing off her fine dresses and her jewelry. She wears a fine watch to school, and a diamond ring, and tries to make us poor girls who don't have such things feel bad because we can't look as fine as she does. Oh, I do wish papa would stop drinking whiskey and beer, so I could have nice things, too!"

"But, mamma," said Sallie, drying her tears, "I do think Nellie Martin is just lovely. She lives in a nice house, and has such neat dresses, and her hair looks so smooth and nice, and I saw her at the park once with the loveliest locket, with her initials on it, and she had a pretty ring; but she don't wear those things to school and show them off to make us feel bad; and she is just as kind to poor girls as to rich ones, and I do love her so!"

That night when Tom Wrench came home he was sober, and he took his little girl in his arms and said: "My dear child, you shall have good dresses and a comfortable home. Wife, I heard this evening, when Sallie said she wished papa would not drink. I was just starting to the saloon, but those words pierced me so I could not go in, so as I passed the Christian mission in that part of the city I went in, and I heard a good missionary tell how my Savior suffering on the cross for me, said, 'I thirst,' and I thought, if he could endure such awful thirst for my sake, for his sake I will endure this thirst that is consuming me. I went forward and confessed my sin and prayed for pardon. The good people prayed for me and the missionary said I could be sure I was forgiven, for God's blessed word says, 'If we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.' I praise him that I am now forgiven and restored to the fellowship of his people."

Next day Tom Wrench went to work a new man. Little Sallie was one happy girl, and when Mrs. Wrench, who could not contain her joy, called over a neighbor's phone to Mrs. Martin, and told her how Sallie loved Nellie because she was kind to the poor, and thoughtful of their feelings, and when Nellie came home from school her mamma told her what joy she had given a poor, unfortunate child by being unselfish, then there were two happy girls, and Nellie said: "Oh, mamma, I'm so glad I yielded to your wish when I wanted to wear my new locket to school, for I'd rather make some other little girl happy than to please myself, for we learned at the mission band last week, 'For Christ also pleased not himself.'"

Gleanings From Magazines.

The Effects of School Life Upon the Health of Children.

"The Effects of School Life Upon the Health of Children" is the very important topic discussed in the "North American Review" by Dr. G. Woodruff Johnston. Investigations in this subject in the United States have been few, superficial and fruitless, but examinations made in Europe throw considerable light upon it. All the European investigations which Dr. Johnston makes the basis of his inquiry disclosed an astonishing amount of ill health among school children, the morbidity in school boys ranging from 20 per cent in Great Britain to 37 per cent in Sweden, and among school girls from 16 per cent in Great Britain to 62 per cent in Sweden. Dr. Johnson enumerates the chronic conditions of which this sum total of ill health was made up, and points out that the amount and degree of ill health increased, not with age in years, but rather in direct proportion to the number of work hours and to the increased burden of studies, as progress was made upward from grade to grade. Dr. Johnston expresses the opinion that the results obtained from European investigations must indicate the conditions which obtain in this country. Many observers have remarked that the overworked scholar, notably in our high school grades, is of a weaker fibre and has a less well-balanced nervous system than other members of the same family, of approximately the same age, who stay at home. Dr. Johnston says:

"The rapidity with which fatigue shows itself is well illustrated by the experiments of Buergerstein, who gave to a number of school children, in the first hour of the first day's work in a week, a series of equally simple mathematical problems, and who found that the period required for and the difficulties attending their solution (the latter as evidenced by the number of errors undetected by the scholar, or discovered and rectified by him) increased pari passu with the flight of time, and reached their maximum in the third quarter of the hour of the experiment.

"Conversely, the readiness with which fatigue yields to proper rest or diversion, and the increase in capacity resulting therefrom, are well shown by the fact that up to a certain point the shorter the period of study, and the more frequent and prolonged the interval of rest, the greater the quantity and the better the quality of work done. In many cities where limited schoolhouse capacity has made half-day sessions necessary, teachers have been astonished to discover that twice as much work was accomplished as under the old plan, and with far less weariness and worry."

His Mood.

A member of the faculty of the University of Wisconsin tells of some amusing replies made by a pupil undergoing an examination in English. The candidate had been instructed to write out examples of the indicative, the subjunctive, the potential and the exclamatory moods. His effort resulted as follows:

"I am endeavoring to pass an English examination. If I answer twenty questions I shall pass. If I answer twelve questions I may pass. God help me!"—Harper's Weekly.

A New San Francisco Finer Than the Old.

The city, from the point of view of site and geographical location, is far more beautiful and impressive than before the fire. The old architecture was mostly bad—heinously bad, as everybody knows. The earthquake tried the works of men and found much of the construction also bad. Men will not veneer any more wooden buildings with thin skins of brick. Honest wooden structures in the one hand, and steel-cage and re-enforced concrete on the other have come off triumphant. Terre-cotta has been disappointing. The new building laws will probably limit the height of buildings to one and a half the width of their streets. This will make fair division of the light of the sun, insure a reasonable uniformity of sky line, and lend property owners a natural motive for relinquishing land to widen streets. The pan-handle of the park will now undoubtedly be extended eastward to Van Ness avenue. The new San Francisco will be far stancher and nobler than the old, but we shall always miss the old nooks and localisms and bohemianisms, and the variegated flavors of many nationalities mingled with glimpses and odors of Cathay which blended in Old California's solvent grace of freedom and love of elbowroom to make the dear old town so inhaustible a spring of human interest.—Benjamin Ide Wheeler, in "American Monthly Review of Reviews."

Solving the Vacation Problem.

A college professor, writing in "The World To-Day," says:

"In these busy days when the vacation has become a necessity of modern life, sooner or later the practical question presents itself to the family head: How can my family enjoy a vacation without extravagant outlay and with real profit? To the man of moderate income distant resorts are prohibited by the expense of travel. The fashionable summer boarding house or the farmhouse hostelry are likewise undesirable for this and other reasons that need not be mentioned.

"Some years ago the writer was confronted by this problem and after various experiments, all more or less unsatisfactory, he determined to carry out a plan which had been maturing in his mind for some years. He would take his family into the wilderness and try the role cf Swiss Family Robinson. Eighteen miles from the railroad, sixteen miles from the last farm, and beyond, the limitless wilderness, there was solitude primeval, so grateful to jaded mind or shattered nerves. We had found, moreover, a bit of woodland that afforded about a quarter of a mile of lake front with an ideal beach for bathing and an ideal point for our building site. The material for our house also—for a log-house we must have—lay within easy reach, hemlock for the walls, tall firs for the rafters and boulder stones in profusion for fireplace and chimney. And all to be had for a song! Six hundred dollars would cover all!—land, house and furnishing."

The Curse of Child Slavery.

If the curse of child labor were but weariness, and the sacrifice of the joy of childhood, the case would be bad enough. But there is cruelty as well. I will not speak from hearsay, but tell what I know.

In the north as well as in the south men are employed for the express purpose of waking children who fall asleep by throwing cold water over them, or by prodding them with sticks. I have seen little boys and girls cower with unspeakable fear beneath the torrents of foul oaths hurled at them by brutal foremen. We shall see enough instances of this cruelty before we are through with this fight. But even worse than the voluntary cruelty of the taskmaster is the inexorable cruelty of the disease-breeding, life-destroying existence these children must lead.

Come, stand with me outside a big cotton mill as the children pour out, a weary, pallid-faced, halting throng. See, their clothes are covered with fine, white dust, and little flakes of lint, like feathers, making them look like so many millers. If you could see into their lungs, you would be able to see that poisonous dust, saturated and clogged with blood; they inhale it all day long. The local doctor will tell you—unless he is a "company doctor," in which case he may know that his bread and butter require that he be discreet and parry your question—that many of these children suffer from a horrible form of dropsy, and that ten per cent of those who go to work in the mills before they are twelve years of age contract consumption in the first five years.

Not only in cotton millls, but in many other factories the same thing occurs. Though the dust may be different in kind, the result is the same. Small particles of glass in the glass factories, fine sawdust in the factories where cheap furniture is made, poisonous fumes in a score of other occupations are as fatal.—Woman's Home Companion.

REGIMENTAL REUNIONS AND FORTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY BATTLE CHICKAMAUGA,

CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 18-20, 1906.

On September 18, 1906, will occur the forty-third anniversary of the Battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle and the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19 and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notabe gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates, the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first and last time since they marched from its blood-stained fields, forty-three years ago.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long until none will be left to do this noble work.

It will be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

"Where Was Bill?"

Bill Jones is a country storekeeper down in Louisiana, and last spring he went to New Orleans to purchase a stock of goods. The goods were shipped immediately, and reached home before he did. When the boxes of goods were delivered at his store by the drayman, his wife happened to look at the largest; she uttered a loud cry and called for a hammer. A neighbor, hearing the screams, rushed to her assistance, and asked what was the matter. The wife, pale and faint, pointed to an inscription on the box which read as follows: "Bill inside."

A recent article on homesickness, in "The Companion," recalls the reply made by a young Swedish maid to her mistress. It expresses clearly, though in imperfect English, what every sufferer from homesickness feels:

"You ought to be contented, and not fret for your old home, Ina," said the lady, as she looked at the dim eyes of the girl. "You are earning good wages, your work is light, every one is kind to you, and you have plenty of friends here."

"Yas'm," said the girl, "but it is not the place where I do be that makes me vera homesick; it is the place where I do n't be."

Little Bright Eyes.

BY MARY CLAY BLACKBURN.

Come to my arms, Little Bright Eyes,
  Just leave for awhile your play,
Cuddle your head on my shoulder;
  I need you so much to-day.

You are so innocent, sweet one,
  In my arms you nestling lay;
Oh, comfort me with your love, dear,
  I need you so much to-day.

You've fallen asleep, my Bright Eyes,
  Forgotten your baby play.
I'll lay you here in your nest, dear,
  You have helped me much to-day.

Advance Society Letters.

A few days ago I wrote to the matron of the St. Louis Orphan Home where Charlie stays, asking if Charlie could come to pay me a little visit—say ten days; and if so when; and if he could stop on his way here, to visit his little sister. His sister Bessie has been adopted by a family, and they live in a town between here and St. Louis; so in coming he would pass right through the place. The matron is Mrs. B. R. Brown, and this is what she answered: "As to Charlie's vacation, it will be in July that he can come. Mrs. Ayars will arrange to get him a half-fare ticket. I will write to the people who have Charlie's sister, and let you know if it will be convenient for them to have him stop to see her. Charlie has been having chills, and was in bed when your letter came, but when I told him of having received the letter, and of its contents, he was soon up, and trying to play. I don't know how I am to manage with Charlie away, he is so much help to me." (We are going to have a Chautauqua Assembly here in July, so Charlie will have something to go to every day. And there is one thing about Bentonville that goes ahead of anything I know of, as an ideal town for Charlie to be in. Now, having only one leg, people are sometimes inclined to look upon our orphan as different from the rest of the world, and their exceedingly close attention becomes annoying. You can imagine how it would be if everybody were staring at you because you happened to have two legs. Legs are not anything to be taken public notice of, and yet people have such little tact and taste, that no part of a person seems safe from observation and the newspapers. But, as I was saying, Bentonville is the city for Charlie. There is a man here—he is in business, too—who goes about upon his knees. There is another with only one arm, a good many who can't walk at all, and an order is being sent for three tricycles worked by hand; and there is already one such here in use, to say nothing of several ladies with ear-trumpets, and a deaf mute, and two or three who are opposed to the missionary societies. Why! if Charlie comes along Main street on his crutches and one leg, and those four hand-power tricycles dash into sight at the same time, and the deaf mute comes to the office door to spell on his fingers into an ear trumpet, nobody will see whether my visitor has a leg or not!)

Othenia Roberts, Sparta, Mo.: "As we have organized an Av. S. here, I have made up my mind to write and tell you about it. We have three members, one old member, Ruth Day, and two new ones, Daisy Armstrong and Othenia Roberts. We have a regular program every time we meet, which we carry out the best we can. We like your 'Bronze Vase' very much. How is Felix?" (He is in fine spirits, and is raising an extra crop of hair for Charlie's coming.) "We have made our badges and wear them to meeting. We meet every Thursday afternoon at 2:30. I am president and Ruth is secretary and treasurer. Have you ever read 'Three Years in Arkansaw,' or 'Through Missouri on a Mule?' I think they ought to be favorites to you, as you have lived in both states." (I have not read the works to which you refer. Do you know "Spartacus?" It ought to be your favorite recitation.) Ruth Day, Sparta, Mo.: "I will not bother you with so long a letter as I wrote before." (Who was bothered?) "Our Advance Society has decided to take a few steps forward and we hope all members will take the same steps. First, we have decided on a society flower; it is the pansy." (That, by the way, is my Chautauqua flower, in honor of "Pansy," the author.) "Second, we have decided on a motto:

Count that day lost whose low descending sun
Views from thy hand no worthy action done.

"We think it would be better to change 'worthy' to 'worthier.' Let us hear from the members about the flower and the motto."

Grace Everest, Oklahoma City: "I am almost too tired to write, for I have been up late at night—I have been 'taking in' the commencement exercises, and tonight I am going to listen to their orations." (Their orations, or their friends' and kinsmen's orations?) "I want to observe all their dignified ways, for in TWO years I'll be in their position. I have been asking girls to join the Advance Society, but they don't seem interested. Surely, they do not realize how much good it will do them. I have never missed reading a Bible verse each day since I began the work, January 6, 1905, a year and a half, although twice I forgot till after I had gone to bed. I have just finished another quarter's work—which is it, the fifth or sixth? I have forgotten." (The sixth, I think.) Elizabeth M. Rothwell, Moberly, Mo.: "I am taking advantage of your offer to forward to Drusie Malott such books and papers as 'We Advance Society' will send. I can not think of any greater privation our missionary can endure than to miss the joy of a book. So I am sending you by express a few volumes that I hope may give her some pleasant hours and remind her of the dear homeland. I regret that I do not know her taste in literature, for I would like to gratify her. Of course, she may have read them, but these sent may be re-read with profit. Some of them are my dear friends. I inclose money for postage, and if anything is left over, let Charlie have the pleasure and benefit of it when he takes his summer outing. I hope he will be well and happy and have the time of his life. Theoretically, I live alone; practically, I am the old woman who lived in a shoe. But my shoe is spacious and beautiful and I keep it full from heel to toe with my dear little comrades. May Raymund and Rhoda come some day? They will see Paul Dombey and Little Nell, and Little Dorrit, and Little Boy Blue, and all the invisible choir of angelic childhood; and I will make them so happy they will never think of the Hands' House or the Orphan Home, again. And now, like dear Mr. Aggency, I am going to run off. Perhaps in my rambles I may find the 'Bronze Vase.'" (I have sent the books, all beautiful and most of them quite new, to Drusie. There were twelve or more delightful cloth-bound books of poems and fiction. It gave me such pleasure when I thought how glad Drusie would be, that I almost felt I was doing it myself! I am sure that was my mother's feeling, too, as she tied them up in parcels for the mail. I feel assured the sender is quite willing to divide her joy with us. I have not written her a word to tell her the books reached me, and that I have sent them on their way, and that I have $4.26 left over for Charlie's benefit. You see, I have trusted her friendship to rise to the sublime height of not waiting for an answer!) J. H. Mohorter, 903 Aubert avenue, St. Louis: "I wish to acknowledge receipt of yours, inclosing renewal subscription, 25 cents for 'The Philanthropist,' and also thank you for your kind words concerning it." ('The Philanthropist' is the paper that tells about the Orphan's Home, where Charlie stays. I wish you would all take it.) Ruth A. Sampsel, Warrensburg, Mo.: "I have just finished my fourteenth quarterly Advance Society report. The 13th of May was my birthday. I am 14 now. I drove the pony and went to church. I am sending you a poem I wrote several days ago. Perhaps you will like it. Do you keep the Advance Society rules, or are you too busy writing stories for our entertainment" (or answering letters from people who send no stamps)? "Our school is out this week. Now I will be wishing for September to roll around again. I went to a children's day and basket dinner exercise last Sunday and had a good time" (and, I trust, a good dinner). "I hear my little chickens crying for supper, so I must stop my scribbling." (I, too, hear some little chickens almost piping their heads off; but they are not my chickens; why do they come into my yard? I believe I will slip to the hydrant and put on the hose and take a squirt at them! I have done so before. If they can ever get the idea that it rains often in my yard, they may keep out, and not eat up my poor little plants. The poem sent by Ruth Sampsel is entitled "The Death Angel." I have room for only the beginning:

There is a black ghost who gives us a groan,
He has an old horse, I shall call it a roan.
I saw the black ghost astride of his roan,
He rode far away, and he started alone.

I wish he would take out after these little chickens. I imagine if they saw that Write us for information concerning The Christian-Evangelist Special to the Buffalo National Convention.

It is time to order Sunday-school supplies for the third quarter. W. W. Dowling's are better than others and cost no more. Send for samples.

"Paths to Power" is Gunsaulus' only book. As a preacher he ranks with Beecher, Brooks and Spurgeon. Book and Christian-Evangelist, $2.25.

An exchange says that the man who thinks a newspaper will suspend publication because he quits taking it is like the man who took a drink from the Ohio river and then looked along the shore to see how much he lowered it.

Three dollars for either two new subscriptions to The Christian-Evangelist or for one renewal and one new subscription will secure you an excellent 11x12½ picture of our Editor. This picture should be hung in thousands of living rooms, pastors' studies, and church libraries as an inspiration to Bible study, zeal for the restoration of primitive Christianity, and the grace of brotherly love.

Now that summer is come and outdoor work is preferable to that in stuffy shop or office, scores of good canvassers can find pleasant, profitable employment representing the various publications of this House. Their present day popularity makes it easy to sell them. Write us at once for terms and territory. Commend this work to some deserving friend who has the swing of success.

Naturally, in times like these the brotherhood waits on the words of W. T. Moore, the sage of Columbia, that old veteran who never ages. It is well to remember while our editors are happy to give his views on current questions, we have his best thoughts in permanent form—Man Preparing for Other Worlds, $2.00; Fundamental Error of Christendom (a fine presentment of baptism), $1.00; Views of Life, $1.00; The Living Pulpit of the Christian Church, $3.00. Fifty cents will be deducted from any of these books if ordered in conjunction with The Christian-Evangelist at $1.50.

We would rather have 1,000 new subscribers from as many towns than to have them all from one, and that is the way they are largely coming. But we welcome clubs also. Since last week's report we note 19 from Winston-Salem, N. C., J. A. Hopkins, minister; 7 from Bentonville, Ark., J. W. Ellis, minister; 3 from Roseberry, Id., H. C. Varner, minister; 3 from Kansas City, Kan., E. L. Ely, minister; 18, Charleston, Ill., Geo. H. Brown, minister; 11, Shelbyville, Ill., L. H. Otto, pastor; 8, Blue Mound, Ill., W. H. black roan coming they would almost run their stubby legs off, getting back to my neighbor's yard, where they belong.)

Drusie R. Malott, North China: "Just a few lines of greeting. Did I tell you that I enjoyed the Woodneys very much? The characters seemed just like real people. The story must have been taken from real life. The chapters always ended just when the reader was curious to know 'what happens next.' The 'Bronze Vase' bids fair to be as interesting. I have been in Chinese homes a number of times. The first time, little Blanche Grimes, aged 12, and I went visiting, all alone. We did not intend to make a call, but were walking in a quiet green corner of the city, when a woman very cordially insisted on our coming in. She brought out a little bench, and we sat outside the door, for the little one-room home was not very inviting on a hot day. She showed her back yard, pleasantly covered with grass and shaded by several trees. As usual, a large crowd of the neighbors soon filled the compound and stood around looking, asking questions and making remarks about us. It is considered the best manners to ask a person's age." (Well, some people get into our compound here who know no better than that!) "As we left we invited them to the chapel. Not so pleasant were the other homes, bare of grass and trees. Mud walls, a bare floor, only straw mats spread over the clay bricks or earth; this constitutes a home. Usually there is no fire for heating the room; the poorer people build a fire outdoors to cook their kettle of mush for noodles, which is the usual food. Our own bill of fare is not so different from that at home as might be expected, for we have our own farm and raise vegetables, fruit and grain. Our cook bakes excellent bread, and we have goat milk. This is red-fruit season (March 5); persimmon season has closed. They are juicy persimmons, the size of large tomatoes, which they resemble. English walnuts and peanuts are plentiful. Rice is too expensive for the mass of the people to eat. Sweet potatoes are very plentiful. You see, I try to tell you what you think will interest your readers. God bless the Advance Society and measure back to it a hundredfold the sunshine its good cheer spreads over this world."

Not So Funny Then.

"'F I should die 'fore I wake," said Donny, kneeling at grandmother's knee, "'F I should die 'fore I wake——"

"I pray," prompted the gentle voice. "Go on, Donny."

"Wait a minute," interposed the small boy, scrambling to his feet and hurrying away downstairs. In a brief space he was back again, and, dropping down in his place, took up his petition where he had left it. But when the little white-gowned form was safely tucked in bed, the grandmother questioned with rebuke concerning the interruption.

"But I did think what I was sayin' grandmother; that 's why I had to stop. You see, I'd upset Ted's menagerie and stood all his wooden soldiers on their heads, just to see how he'd tear 'round in the morning. But 'f—I should die 'fore I wake, why—I didn't want him to find them that way, so I had to go down and fix 'em right. There's lots of things that seem funny if you're goin' to keep on livin,' but you don't want 'em that way if you should die 'fore you wake."—Baptist Commonwealth.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Volume XLIII. No. 25.

ST. LOUIS, JUNE 21, 1906.

I CAN conceive no more wholesome discipline for the energetic man or woman than this deliberate encounter with the spirit of solitude. Mark off some hour, or some half-hour, of each busy day as your own, dedicated solely to the private occasions of the spirit. For that brief period hold the world at bay; go to your room as to a shrine; take no book with you, no humblest task—simply sit still, or kneel down, and explore your own heart. Celebrate the sacrament of silence; it will bring with it on the hands of viewless priests a meat that the world knows not of, and it will make audible to you the still, small voice of God that speaks to us only when we are very still. One such hour, rightly used, will teach you more of God and truth and duty than all the sages can. It will remain with you as a consecration and an impulse when you take up again the vexing tasks of life. You will be stronger for it, more composed in mind, more certain in aim, sweeter and more patient in temper, and as you walk the thronged roads of life once more, you will bring perfume and purification in your very presence. Let your household, and your children, and your friends know that you keep a Lonely Hour for God in every day, when no interruption is permitted; when even Love must stand without the door and wait; for that hour is sacred to a higher Love, and devoted to a more enduring vision. "I saw a Door opened into heaven," said the Apocalyptic Dreamer; be sure of it that Door of Things Unseen is only opened when the doors of earth are shut.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

We believe a scriptural admonition of reat significance to a successful centennial s "Let brotherly love continue."

The Bible suggestions to think no evil, peak no evil, do no evil against the rethren merit earnest consideration. There s extant an unlovely disposition to speak isparagingly of brethren entitled to great espect. Recently a man referred to "old McGarvey" and made similarly disrespectul allusions to other brethren from whom e differed in opinions theological. We rotest not only against the personal disrepect shown disciples who should be greaty revered, but also against the positive njury done the cause of primitive Chrisianity by this discrediting of our leaders n Christian thought and life.

We have used Brother McGarvey's ame to illustrate our thought because he vill suffer less injury thereby than one vhose Christian integrity is less invulnerble. We protest against this tendency to mpugn the motives and seriously question he honesty of men whose purposes are not ully comprehended by us. Brethren of ood repute should no longer tremble at he thought of having their names up for liscussion by groups of ministers lest unind words be spoken. We personally now men represented as being ambitious nd mercenary but whom we have found n visiting their local congregations to be eloved by their people and regarded as he personification of Christian hospitality nd benevolence.

We must all protest against a leveling rocess within the church, consisting of owering the high to the exclusion of lifting ower levels. "Behold how these Chrisians love one another!" should be specially rue of our ministry. Let us eliminate all nvy from our ranks and usher in such an ra of brotherly love and helpfulness as will timulate every man to do his best between his and 1909, by making him more zealous, raver-hearted, and successful. Our editors vithout exception are true men of God; ur secretaries are workmen of whom no eligious body should be ashamed; our ministers are shepherds of the sheep par xcellence; the personnel of our membership is of the highest standard. The world knowledges this. Let us rejoice in it nd promote a higher and more helpful sprit de corps. Let us mark well and rerovingly any preacher dealing in innuenloes and insinuations reflecting on a brother minister or detracting from the credit due im for worthy achievements, and let us naugurate a dispensation of brotherly love and helpfulness. Assured there will be no nmity or conspiracies beside us or behind us, let us all with renewed zeal and courage press on toward the mark of our high calling for 1909.

Work Between Us and the Centennial.

BY O. M. THOMASON.

The work before us is a great one. The end to be reached is an important one, and much work will be required to reach it. The church is reaching such ponderous proportions now that it can make a great showing if properly directed. The work is more of construction than destruction. True there are things to be destroyed, but the truth will destroy them by supplanting them, if it is pushed ahead. People are not going to give up what they have, even though it be error, until they learn better. The truth is better and will take the place of many errors held by many people if we can get them to see the truth. The injunction, "Preach the Word," is mandatory as well as qualifying. It tells what to preach, and limits it to the Word; but much stress is also laid upon the command, "preach." Not many will question that the Word is the thing to be preached, but some seem to think it is not absolutely necessary that we preach it; but in the event that we do preach, why, of course preach the Word. One of the functions of the church is to preach; not to herself, but to the world; and a church that fails on this point to the utmost of her ability, will die. The fact that a church preaches to the world a little may prolong the death struggle, but will not save the church. The marching orders are, "Go unto ALL the world; preach the Gospel to every creature; go teach all nations; be my witnesses unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Paul handed this commission on down to the evangelist when he said, "Preach the Word," and instructed him to lay the responsibility at our feet when he said, "The same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." If we are faithful men this applies to us. We should not be content with securing our own souls. We may think we have secured them when, because of our selfishness with the truth, we may forfeit our birthright. Only about one-third of the population of the earth are Christians, if we include all shades of opinions. If we narrow it down to those who are Christians only, the number will not exceed one and a half millions. This gives us a fair conception of the immensity of the work before us. Are we equal to the task? We are growing fast, and our capacity for accomplishing more increases as we grow. Do we widen and expand as we become capable? As our arms become longer and stronger, do we reach them out? The work before us is not to make people good, but to preach the gospel to them. Then they alone will be responsible for how they live. It is not a question of will the people be good? but will we do good? Our Master went about doing good.

The people must call on the name of the Lord if they are saved. But how can they call on him in whom they do not believe? and how can they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how can they hear without a preacher? and how can they preach except they be sent? Now, who is to send them? The church, being the pillar and support of the truth, must co-operate with the preacher and send him. The church must utilize every means that material evolution and progress develops by which the work of sending may be facilitated. It must exercise sanity and judgment, and adopt means and methods by which we can the most successfuly manage and direct this ponderous piece of machinery in its extensive and wondrous work. The work of raising money for and directing and keeping the people in touch with four or five hundred missionaries in every clime under the sun is no small task. And it can not be done in a slip-shod, half-hearted manner. There must be business tact and wise generalship.

Doors are swinging open to the gospel, and the creeds of men are becoming less popular. The walls of Babylon are crumbling, and the foundations of sectarianism are decaying. This Restoration is in the vigor of youth. It can not afford to cultivate an objective disposition. It must not contract, neither must it become so broad that it can not enter the strait gate or traverse the narrow way. But it must become as broad and sympathetic as Christ. It must not be selfish, but must have a burning passion for the evangelization of the world. That is the work before us. Belt the earth with one message. Let love cement the rents and divisions and spread the mantle of charity over our brothers, and relegate our opinions to the rear and forget them in the brotherly love that will make all believers in Christ one, as he and his Father are one, and thus fulfill his earnest prayer. This gospel must be proclaimed to all the world. That is the work before us. The Church can do it. But there must be co-operation. All the organs must perform their functions. All the members and joints must work freely. There must be peace, harmony and unanimity. Let us not be content with good churches that can pay us good salaries. These are only means to the great end. The end is to evangelize the world. We are going to that goal. How dare any man stand in our way! Our God is back of us, and he will prosper us, but those who have no heart in the work will stand by and oppose. Let us construct Christianity, and not try to destroy what some others do, even though it be wrong. Give the world the truth and error will flee away like a shadow.

Current Events

Statehood.

The Hamilton-Beveridge statehood bill, with the Foraker amendment, has been passed by the Senate and the House and signed by the President. The bill admits Oklahoma and Indian Territory as the state of Oklahoma, fixing the capital at Guthrie until 1913, and offers joint statehood to Arizona and New Mexico conditioned on the acceptance of it by both territories voting separately. As an inducement to the acceptance of joint statehood, the new state of Arizona will receive $5,000,000 for a school fund and a very large amount of public land for the same purpose. The offering of this "bribe," as Senator Morgan calls it, increases the probability of acceptance. Arizona has professed to be unalterably opposed to union with New Mexico, and that for three reasons: First, that Arizona's size, resources and prospective wealth and population entitle her to separate statehood; second, that the proposed consolidated state would be unwieldy in size and therefore unduly expensive in administration (for example, the railroad fare from Phoenix to Santa Fe is greater than the fare from New York to Omaha); third, that the Mexican majority in New Mexico would outweigh and outvote the American population of the whole state, and would consequently put the control of the state in the hands of an alien and unprogressive element. New Mexico grants the first two propositions and claims that New Mexico also is worthy of separate statehood, but naturally resents the suggestion that her population is unprogressive and that she would be a drag upon the development of Arizona. On the whole, New Mexico is inclined to accept joint statehood. There is abroad in New Mexico also a secretly cherished idea that if the proposition as offered by Congress is rejected by Arizona and accepted by New Mexico, the result will be the admission of New Mexico separately at an early date, while Arizona will be allowed to wait indefinitely. The joint statehood proposition will be voted on at the November election. If accepted, the constitutional convention will meet on December 3, and the election for state offices will be held sixty days later.

Smoot.

Smoot stock has gone down in the Senate. The majority report of the committee on privileges and elections recommends unseating him, but the precise way in which it is to be done is still a question. To declare that he was never a properly qualified and elected senator requires only a majority vote. Some of those who approve the majority report of the committee believe that the only constitutional method of procedure is to admit the validity of his election and expel him, which requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate. The report of the committee gives the following reasons for disqualifying Mr. Smoot:

> "That Mr. Smoot is one of a self-perpetuating body of men known as the first presidency and twelve apostles of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church; that these men claim divine authority to control the members of said church in all things temporal, as well as spiritual; that this authority is, and has been, for several years past, so exercised by the said first presidency and twelve apostles as to encourage the practice of polygamy in the state of Utah and elsewhere, contrary to the constitution and laws of the state of Utah, and the law of the land; that the said first presidency and twelve apostles do now control and for a long time past have controlled, the political affairs of the state of Utah, and have thus brought about in said state a union of church and state, contrary to the constitution of said state of Utah and to the constitution of the United States, and the said Reed Smoot comes here, not as the accredited representative of the state of Utah in the Senate of the United States, but of the chief hierarchy which controls the church, and has usurped the functions of the state in said state of Utah." (Then follows a list of prominent Mormon leaders, including President Smith, who have been living in polygamy since the manifesto of 1890.) "These facts abundantly justify the assertion made in the protest that 'the supreme authorities in the church, of whom Senator-elect Reed Smoot is one, not only connive at violations of, but protect and honor the violators of the laws against polygamy and polygamous cohabitation.' " (On this ground the committee finds Mr. Smoot as unworthy of membership in the Senate, as though he were personally practicing polygamy. After a survey of the "oath of vengeance," the report continues): "It is difficult to conceive how one could discharge the obligation which rests on every senator so to perform his official duties as to promote the welfare of the people of the United States, and at the same time be calling down the vengeance of heaven on this nation because of the killing of the founders of the Mormon church sixty years ago."

Chancellor Day.

A college president has ample opportunities for making conspicuous mistakes, and Chancellor Day, of Syracuse University, has been making large use of his advantages in this direction. As between the President on the one hand and the beef trust and the Standard Oil Company on the other, Chancellor Day is with the trusts. A couple of weeks ago Dr. Day came to the defense of Standard Oil, which is now undergoing a rather disquieting investigation, and asserted that Roosevelt, who is instigating these investigations which have a tendency to bear the stocks of this and other great corporations, is a worse anarchist than Hearst. As to the elements of the case which strike most of us as pre-eminently important, he has not much to say. Whether the packing houses are making dirty dollars out of dirty meat, and whether the oil trust's methods have been either legal or honest, are questions which do not seem to him of much consequence. The main issue is that investigations cause financial loss to the corporations. Therefore it is anarchy to investigate. He makes a bad matter worse by trying to base his solicitude for the corporations on the fact that thousands of persons of small means have invested their savings in the stock of these companies. As a separate proposition, this may be true, but it is also true that Standard Oil is not a widows' and orphans' benefit association. The widows-and-orphans argument is an ancient one. It is more frequently applied to keep meddling hands off of public service corporations, such as street railways. The mode of procedure in such cases, according to Collier's, is: first, get a franchise for less than it is worth; second, water the stock; third, unload it on the public; finally, howl about widows and orphans. Dr. Day is entitled to credit for his originality in turning this classic argument to account for the defense of Standard Oil which, whatever may have been its other faults, has never been specially guilty of "unloading on the public." In his baccalaureate sermon last Sunday, Chancellor Day took further occasion to attack the President as a "muck-raker," and to decry the tendency of this "scandal-mongering epoch" to investigate everything, regardless of the loss which may be caused. The recent investigations of the packing houses and railroads "has cost us tens of millions of money and the respect of mankind." Still no word as to whether the conditions which have been investigated were really bad. No word of censure for those who have made the rottenness, but only for those who have disclosed it so that it might be cured. This is bad doctrine for a baccalaureate sermon to a graduating class. It is, in effect, that the disclosure of evil is worse than the commission of it, and that the best way to cure an abuse is to hide it. Chancellor Day, whose college has received a million of Standard Oil money and expects more, gives great aid and comfort to those who cry out against the acceptance of "tainted money" by institutions of learning. Neither President Harper nor any other official of the University of Chicago, which has received ten times as much Standard Oil money, ever laid himself as wide open to criticism as Chancellor Day has.

Hearst vs. Taggart.

The feud between Mr. Hearst and Mr. Taggart is assuming interesting proportions. Mr. Taggart was Democratic national chairman in the last campaign and is ambitious to continue his leadership. Mr. Hearst was a candidate for the nomination, and is doubtless anxious to repeat his candidacy. Mr. Taggart was made chairman of the national committee on the theory that he would be able to carry the doubtful state of Indiana, his own state. But as it turned out there were no doubtful states, and it would be wholly unfair to make him bear the burden of blame for Democratic defeat. Still, there is a very large element of the party which feels that, for a dignified campaign, with a dignified candidate, it would be easy to find a more suitable leader than Taggart. Hearst, among others, thinks so. His fight on Taggart has now taken the form of an exposure of the conditions at the resorts owned and operated by Taggart. The hotel at French Lick Springs is the property of Mr. Taggart. It is a notorious gambling resort, probably one of the greatest in the country, now that Mr. Canfield has retired from business. It was therefore not mere yellow journalism when Mr. Hearst's New York and Chicago papers published lurid stories last Sunday under these headlines: "Tom Taggart Conducts the Greatest Gambling Hell in America. Men, Women and Children Play for High Stakes, Night and Day, at French Lick Springs Hotel Casino. Law Defied and not even Feared at French Lick, Indiana." The stories were well worked up, with plenty of circumstance and detail. One of them was written by a Presbyterian preacher in Chicago who had been commissioned to make an examination. While Mr. Hearst's motives in making these disclosures through his papers may not be unmixed, it is none the less a good service to the public and the party. For the Democratic party, after a Republican administration marked by exceptional efforts in the direction of reform, to enter upon a presidential campaign under the leadership of a man who is conducting a lawless business of this sort, would be a most grievous folly. Mr. Bryan says that the silver question is dead and that the only issue now is the trusts. That means a campaign in which the dominant note will be reform. And it will be difficult to connect the words Taggart and reform in a single sentence unless one of the words is accompanied by a negative.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. THE PROTESTANT ERA—THE PERIOD OF REUNION.

11. Federation the Next Logical Step.

It is very instructive to study the evolution of Christian union sentiment. There was a time when the different religious bodies seemed to think they were doing God service in waging warfare against each other, and in strengthening their own denominational position at the expense of another. In this state of mutual warfare no respect was paid to each other in planning for the extension of God's kingdom on earth. It was a step forward when religious comity took the place of open warfare, and when the different churches were able to say to each other, as Abraham said to Lot, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee. * * * If thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if you will take the right hand, then I will go to the left." That is, they agreed to let each other alone, and not trespass upon each other's territory.

This soon gave place to something still better. The religious bodies holding Christ as their common Head, came to feel that they did not wish to let each other alone; that they had too much in common, and that they should meet together on stated occasions and manifest their brotherliness of spirit. This was the period of platform unity. Representatives of different ecclesiastical bodies met and exchanged courtesies, and compliments, and showed that they really did recognize each other as brethren. Occasionally they held union meetings, or united in some crusade against certain public evils that were a menace to the moral welfare of the community; but these efforts were irregular and spasmodic, and passed away with the exigency which called them forth. But all this was a preparatory step to something better. It was during this period that most all our great interdenominational movements had their origin, furnishing an opportunity for brotherly intermingling and co-operation. But the time came—inevitably came—when leaders in the various religious bodies began to feel that something better than occasional platform meetings, and occasional union meetings, was required to meet the demand of our Lord's prayer for the unity of his followers, and what they finally decided upon as an advance step toward this consummation was Church Federation—an agreement to co-operate together on the simple basis of the acceptance of Christ as Savior and Lord, in all things which represented common aims and which could be better accomplished by united than by separate action. The inevitable sequence of this movement, as following those which had gone before, and its essential relation to the realization of the age-long desire for unity, may be seen in the light of the following facts:

1. There has been marked progress within the past quarter of a century in the spirit of unity among the churches of this country. Not only so, but there is a much greater unity of belief and of teaching and practice, than there was a half or a quarter of a century ago. We have passed out of what has been called the centrifugal period of the church, when religious bodies were flying off from the center, into the centripetal period, in which the religious bodies are being drawn closer towards the center, which is Christ.

2. Nevertheless, each of these religious bodies believes, conscientiously, that it stands for certain vital, or at least important, truths, and that it is its duty to give continuous emphasis to these truths. Let us take our own religious movement for example: We believe that we stand for certain great and important truths which need emphasis in our day, and we would not agree to any union that involved the surrender of any of these vital truths or principles. We must allow that other religious bodies are just as conscientious as we are, and hold with as great tenacity to certain principles in policy or doctrine, which they regard as important, if not vital, to the welfare of the church.

3. We have never advocated a union that involved the sacrifice of any man's conscience, for no sort of union would be worth anything to a man if he has purchased it at the expense of his conscience. Conscience is not something that can be modified on demand; it requires a process of education and enlightenment in which truth is seen in different proportion and in proper relation to effect a change in conscience.

4. This means that we cannot immediately have Christian union on what we believe to be the New Testament basis, since some of the beliefs and practices conscientiously adhered to by many we believe to be at variance with New Testament teaching and practice. We can not ask others to do what we ourselves refuse to do, namely, surrender honest convictions of truth for the sake of unity. When we have made due allowance for liberty in matters of doctrine and polity which do not affect Christian faith or character there still remain obstacles to an immediate union of the ideal type taught in the New Testament.

5. Meanwhile, in spite of their imperfections, God has blessed, and is blessing, these various religious bodies just in proportion as they have been, and are, faithful to him, and give themselves to the advancement of his kingdom. To deny that these churches have the marks of divine favor upon them, would be to shut our eyes to the most patent facts. The truth forces itself upon us that God has no perfect instrumentalities in this world, and that he is using the best instruments he has for the accomplishment of his purposes.

6. Since the period of most rapid growth in Christian union sentiment has been the period of the greatest interdenominational co-operation it is clear that it is not by the policy of isolation, but by that of closer co-operation, that this process of unification is to be carried on toward perfection. Not to see this is to be blind to the present-day movements of God among his people.

What conclusion follows from these premises?

A Transition Period.

Do any of us remember the time when we were not in a transition period? We have heard of it from our boyhood. It has been said that our age is one of transition; and when has our own religious movement not been passing through a transition period? And this has always been true. Every religious movement that moves is bound to be always in a transition period; that is, it must always be passing from one stage of development to another. This does not mean, of course, that the fundamental things of Christianity are changing, for Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day and forever, and all the great truths relating to him are equally unchanging. But our conceptions of these fundamental realities change with our enlarging view and our increasing knowledge. How could it be otherwise?

This fact alarms some people, but we ought rather to be alarmed if this were not true in our case, for it would prove that we had ceased to make any progress, and that our religion and our theology were becoming stereotyped. Whatever lives grows, and whatever grows changes, and these changes are brought about under the unchanging laws of life. There is a principle of life embodied in every seed which determines the lines and limitations of its growth. So there is a life-principle incarnate in every religious movement which determines its development. Extraneous causes may modify this outward growth, but the unfolding life within continues to assert itself and in the end will prevail. "We can do nothing against truth."

The fundamental principle embodied in the religious movement of the Disciples of Christ is that of Christian unity proceeding from, and developing under, the supremacy and centrality of Christ in the Christian religion. That is to say, the life that is in him is the life of love, and is essentially unifying in its nature. Just in proportion as this life of Christ dominates the lives of his followers will they be one in him. This life-principle has been hindered by various causes, chiefly growing out of the flesh, and of our partial knowledge of truth, but it continues to assert itself with ever-increasing power, and must ever continue so to do until Christ's prayer has its fulfillment in a united Church. The Church must continue to be in a transition state until it passes from under the dominancy of the flesh to that of the Spirit, from the supremacy of dogma to the supremacy of Christ, from the partialness or imperfection of knowledge to the regnancy of love, and hence from a fragmentary and divided state into one of unity and co-operation. It is this growing ascendancy of love, subordinating everything else to its imperious demands, restoring the true proportion of emphasis and preparing the way for union, that is responsible for those changes which make the present time pre-eminently a transition period.

Notes and Comments.

The Rev. John Roach Straton, of the Second Baptist Church, Chicago, has fired his blunderbuss against Christian unity. He thinks that those who are loudest in their advocacy of Christian union are those "whose anchors are dragging, and who are drifting they know not where." This statement reveals a very narrow and limited outlook on the Christian world to-day. A man who has not yet learned that the most profoundly spiritual and the most effective preachers in the religious world to-day are sounding the note of unity needs to take down his denominational blinds, and look out to see what is going on in the world. He admits that "if unity could be effected without any compromise of principles or any sacrifice of truth it would be a desirable thing. It would enable the Protestant churches to better reach the unsaved, and it would greatly simplify many of the problems of foreign missions." Nobody, so far as we know, is in favor of union on any other condition But, after the above deliverance, the speaker goes on to apologize for our divisions. He finally winds up by saying, however, that "the true source of authority, and the only ground for the union of the Christian world that will really be helpful is Jesus Christ as he is revealed in the Old and New Testament Scriptures." Very well and truly said. Why not, then, plead for union on that basis, instead of apologizing for our divisions?

"I hear it from several," writes a correspondent, "that you are too timid; too much under the limit of some tether. It seems so to me." Yes, we have no doubt it seems so to our brother, and to the few who have spoken to him, but, on the other hand, it seems to a far larger number that we have been too advanced and progressive in our views. This is pretty good evidence that we have kept fairly well in the middle of the road, and have avoided dangerous extremes. This is exactly what The Christian-Evangelist has always aimed to do—not for policy's sake, but because that is the course our judgment dictates as the true one. Our editorial policy has always been criticized on opposite sides, both by the radically progressive, and the radically conservative, classes. The future of this movement, however, does not lie with either of these extremes, though each one may have its part to perform, but with the great conservatively-progressive body of Disciples, who believe in a progress that conserves truth, and in a conservatism that progresses out of error.

W. G. Walker, state evangelist, North Carolina, writing to "The Christian Weekly" from Durham, in that state, says:

> I really believe if Bro. Garrison could have a little taste of what we have had in the way of federation in Durham, he would not be quite so pronounced in his statements concerning the door of opportunity afforded in federation. I wish I had time to write a paper for him on "Federation in Durham." Federation might "sorter" do where we are strong (I mean from a practical viewpoint), but from my knowledge of the sects where we are weak, and especially in the South, our plea would be doomed to failure.

Is the manifestation of a brotherly spirit and the willingness to co-operate as far as truth will permit, subject to geographical limitations? Is it really true that "our plea would be doomed to failure" in the South if its advocates were to be willing to practice Christian union as far as they could—that is, as far as the other religious bodies would permit? Must we be kind and brotherly, then, only to those who will reciprocate our kindness? We can not compel people to federate with us, except by the compulsion of love; but if there is any place where we specially need to manifest the spirit of wider brotherhood, it is where we are weakest and least known, and where the denominations are narrowest and most bitter. This ought to be self-evident.

The Christian-Evangelist has not lessened one whit in its advocacy of every "cause" among the Disciples of Christ, because of its advocacy of federation. One of the home missionary secretaries, in complaining of some of our periodicals, ought to have made distinctions. But as The Christian-Evangelist has given without charge to the societies, which can not be said of all our papers, ten times as much space to our missionary societies as the paper in which his article appeared, we can understand why exception was not made of The Christian-Evangelist, and we do not believe that most of our papers have allowed the federation discussion to "sidetrack" any missionary interest. In the columns of most of them there has been no discussion at all. As for The Christian-Evangelist we have printed just as many articles advocating missions and just as much missionary news as we have in any previous year and as we would have done had there been no federation discussion. We do not hold ourselves responsible for the "threats" against the missionary societies that have appeared in one of our contemporaries, which did no more than it was compelled to for the cause of home missions last year, when federation was not being discussed.

> If our federationist brethren, who are holding forts in the older cities of the country, would get out on the firing-line, and come in contact with the spirit of sectarianism as it exists in the leaders of religious thought in large sections of the country, they would perhaps become disillusioned in reference to the disposition and temper of those who oppose our great Scriptural plea.—J. B. Briney, in The Christian Weekly.

Here is a confession of what we have contended for all the while, namely, that sectarianism is the only foe to federation, and if it should fail it would be because of sectarianism. We are under no illusion about the spirit of sectarianism. We know too well its prevalence. One does not need to go to the "firing line"—wherever that is—to find its baneful influence. It lifts its serpent head in every Eden, and foments strife and hatred, and opposes union and co-operation among Christians in every community, and in every religious body. Oh, that we were large enough, and Christly enough, to oppose it with brotherly love, with kindness, with catholicity, with zeal for the wide kingdom of God, "overcoming evil with good!" Do we really believe in it?

As our readers know, Z. T. Sweeney filled the pulpit of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church during part of the absence of Brother Power. Brother Sweeney preached a powerful sermon, citing facts and figures to prove that the number of heathen is increasing out of all proportion to the number who are being saved through Christianity. Brother Sweeney might have made the same argument in reference to the home field. He referred to the failure of the philosophy of the Greeks and the wisdom of the Jewish nation to conquer the world as lessons to the present Protestantism to put aside the little petty differences of denominationalism and unite in the effort to Christianize the world.

"This sectarianized, denominationalized, petty, jangling Christendom has shown its inability to cope with the question," he said, "and I want to go on record as saying that if this condition continues the rescue of the world from heathen control is all an idle dream. The sectarian Christianity does not present to the heathen that which will conquer him. The man who attempts to cover up these facts is an enemy of Jesus Christ. The private secretary of the Sultan of Turkey once said to me: 'If you want to make Christians of us you had better preach something you can agree upon among yourselves.'

"He was right. What would you think of a political party that would start out to win a campaign by splitting into fifty or sixty small parties, each fighting the others? The marvel to me is that Christianity has accomplished so much. We must cast aside the little, nonsensical differences between us—the differences between tweedledum and tweedledee—and preach the Gospel of Christ as a personal Savior, the Gospel that Peter preached at Jerusalem and Paul preached at Corinth, or we never will be able to convert the world."

How great the need for us to present a united front on the things wherein we are agreed!

Reports from our state conventions are registering lower attendance than usual, and confining it more exclusively to our ministers. The encouraging statistics of church homes being dedicated, mortgages burned, souls saved, and increased missionary offerings might indicate to a cynic that the workers were busy while the preachers were holding these gala days, but there is reason to fear lack of proper interest in our state conventions. Improved transportation facilities and increased prosperity are making our country smaller than formerly and bringing our national conventions very close to our people, and there is a growing tendency to leave the smaller for the larger conventions. While it is desirable that every one possible attend these great gatherings of the Disciples let it be remembered that individual attendance is more needed at our county, district and state conventions; let all who can, come up to Buffalo, but let us develop a "convention conscience" that will take us to the more elemental conventions.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The "Easy Chair" seems to catch a vision of growing distinctness rising in the north. It is a fair picture to look upon from this latitude. As we gaze upon it, in its splendid outlines, we see a vast stretch of water, with the waves breaking on the sandy beach, above which rises a series of wooded hills, with deep and shady ravines, here and there, and lofty ridges from which two lakes and the surrounding country for miles, with fields, and orchards, and farmhouses are visible, and overarching all the blue sky of heaven. We see the swaying pines nodding to the breeze, and mark the checkered sunshine as it sifts down through the branches and lies in golden bars upon the earth. We can almost catch the music of the breaking waves, and of the singing pines, and feel the breath of cool air that sweeps over the lake. Nestling in a grove of pines and hemlocks, on the shore of this larger lake, is a little cottage which seems to hold out its welcoming hands and to bid us come and inhabit. The wrens are singing about its eaves, the squirrels are scampering and chattering over its roof, the wild flowers are blooming on the hillside, and all these join in the invitation. We are sure our readers will not be surprised to learn that before many weeks this alluring picture of quiet and restfulness will have drawn us away from the tumult and noise of the city and the grinding routine of office duty. Other scenes and duties, however, for the present, intervene, but when these are out of the way the invitation from Pentwater, and the heights of Garrison Park, will receive our favorable consideration.

One of the intervening objects which prevents immediate surrender to the inviting vision in the north is the Missouri Christian Missionary Convention. It meets this year at Hannibal, and already the "Easy Chair" is on the scene. The journey hither this forenoon, after the rains of the past few days, which have washed the face of Nature and refreshed all growing things, was a constant delight to the eye. There are no richer lands than those lying along the Missouri and Mississippi River bottoms. During most of the way the great Mississippi, now at full-tide, flowed majestically on one side, while waving wheat and corn fields were on the other, with the hills beyond. The golden wheat, now ripening to harvest, made a pleasing contrast with the dark green corn and the leaf-green of the foliage. Of the two rivers, one of which we crossed and the other of which we ascended along its western shore to Hannibal, one bisects the state and the other washes its eastern shore. What magnificent domains they drain! How much romantic and thrilling history clusters around these two great waterways, which, having their origin in widely separated regions, follow their converging courses until their waters meet and mingle in one lordly stream, and henceforth flow on irresistibly to the Gulf! What a list of tributaries flows into this mighty stream—"the Father of Waters"—from its source to its mouth! What brings these varied streams together to form one mighty river large enough to bear the commerce of a continent? God's law of gravitation. It is God's law of moral gravitation—which we call love—that is drawing the once widely separated churches into unity and co-operation. As well try to turn back the streams that flow into the mighty Mississippi and make it the nation's artery as to attempt to prevent, by theological or ecclesiastical quirks and quibbles the coming together of God's people into one United Church—the agent of God's grace to a perishing world.

As we sit here on the portico of a friend's house, who is extending to us Christian hospitality, we see the clans gathering from different sections of "Imperial Missouri" to attend this state convention. They are drawn hither by the same law that holds the universe together—the law of attraction. We do not know the names of all these people that we see thronging to the Christian Church from each incoming train, but we feel safe in saying that they represent the cream of Missouri Disciplehood. Did you ever stop to think how much the ongoing of our cause in the several states, and in the world, depends upon the convention-goers? If all the members in the state were to decide, any given year, as many do, that it is not convenient to attend the convention, and that their private interests require their presence at home, what would become of the cause of state missions? And what would become of all our co-operative interests in the state? It would not be long, under this sort of neglect, until they would all perish, and the churches, living only for selfish ends, would soon die of dry rot. That we have grown from a mere handful in the state of Missouri, to be the leading religious body in the state, is due, under God, to the kind of people now gathering yonder in groups, with their hand-baggage, having left their farms, their shops, their offices, their domestic duties, to come together and spend a few days in considering the interests of the Lord's work. Some of these people have the convention habit. You could not hire them to miss one of the great convocations of the brotherhood. These conventions are Mount Pisgahs from which they catch glimpses of the Promised Land. God bless our convention-goers!

The "Easy Chair" heard a voice a few days ago calling out, "Stop, thief!" But we paid no attention to it, knowing that we had stolen nothing and that the voice could not be intended for us. There is nothing like the testimony of a good conscience when such cries are being raised. We do not doubt that the officer pursuing this thief had just cause for complaint, but may we suggest that he called the thief by the wrong name? The name he gave to the thief was "Federation Discussion," and he was charged with stealing money from the missionary treasuries and from other public interests. We are bold to say that we do not believe this is the name of the guilty party. It is time to call things and parties by their right names. Discussion is honorable and right. No question is more worthy of discussion than federation—a form of Christian union. No people ought to be so much interested in that subject as the Disciples of Christ. We would have had no missionary treasuries to rob had it not been for Christian union. When we come to the point that we can't discuss it without robbing our missionary treasuries, those who do the robbing ought to take down their signs and go out of business. What is the real name of the thief that ought not only to be "stopped," but put in solitary confinement? There are several names that properly enough designate him. Call him "Hate," "Envy," "Strife," "Unbrotherliness," "Narrowness," "Bigotry" and "Misrepresentation," for his name is legion. These are the thieves which have made Federation discussion the occasion of plying their unholy business. The brotherhod should recognize this fact and let the responsibility rest where it belongs if we are to profit by the unhappy experiences through which we have recently passed, or are passing.

Questions for discussion come up among thinking people with the inevitableness of the tides. Nothing can keep them back but mental stagnation. They are born out of the intellectual and spiritual travail of the times. Such a question is the closer unification of the religious bodies of Christendom. It has come in the fullness of time. It is folly to quarrel at its coming, especially when we have hastened its coming. The manner, the spirit, the temper with which we meet these great questions as they arise—that is what tests a religious people. If we have been found wanting in the essential qualities for dealing with this great question that has come to try the religious world, and have engaged in petty wrangling and ill-natured epithets instead of measuring up to the great opportunity, as leaders in a cosmic movement toward unity, let us not blame the issue but the unworthy manner in which we have met it.

The Last Home of Our First Missionary

By Anna R. Bourne

On May 12, as the eastward falling shadows lengthened over the little valley, a distinguished traveler was driven into the village of Bethany on his way to the Campbell homestead just beyond. Here he rested under the stately old trees, amidst soft perfume of blossoming flowers, and the evening and morning chorus of the birds, that make this home their special delight. But he heard not the song of birds, nor scented the breath of the fresh morning flowers. He was sleeping—sleeping through the day and night, close to the home and hearts that loved him. This stranger coming again to old Bethany, was none other than Dr. James T. Barclay, the first missionary sent by the Christian church to a foreign land. For thirty-two years he had been resting in a quiet little garden in the south—a tiny "Campo-Santo" in the state of Alabama. During a recent tour in the south, his son Dr. J. Judson Barclay, in obedience to a long cherished desire to have his father near him, brought his remains to lay them to rest among the illustrious dead in the Campbell Cemetery. Appropriate it is, indeed, that he who went as our first foreign missionary should spread his couch in death beside the honored father and son who proclaimed the restoration of apostolic Christianity and opened anew the Bible to a new world.

Dr. Barclay was born at Hanover Courthouse, Va., May 22, 1807. In 1830 he married Miss Julia Ann Sowers, of Staunton, Va. Two years after their marriage they purchased the estate of "Monticello," and became the first successors of Thomas Jefferson in this grand old Southern mansion, where they kept up the stately traditions of the Old Dominion life until 1835. Being of a deeply religious temperament, Dr. Barclay and his cultured wife saw life from the viewpoint of duty and responsibility and from the stately seclusion and retirement of life at Monticello their thoughts turned with a burning desire to the missionary field—to China. Mrs. Barclay, whose zeal easily matched that of her husband, sent her jewels to Dr. Converse, of Richmond, Va., to be sold for the missionary cause. They were at this time members of the Presbyterian Church, and would have gone under the direction of the Presbyterian board had not Dr. Barclay's mother bitterly opposed making the sacrifice of her only son on this mission field. For this reason they temporarily abandoned the thought of realizing their cherished desire. Soon after, these two consecrated lives coming under the influence of the restoration movement, as led by the Campbells, they became members of the Christian Church. When, in a few years, his mother died, Providence, it seemed, opened the way for Dr. Barclay to go forward, and he was not disobedient to the call. He and his wife had by this time abandoned the idea of going to China, and were seized with a yearning to preach the Gospel of Christ in old Jerusalem, where the first clarion call had rung out to the world. Accordingly, in 1850, when the American Christian Missionary Society (which had just sprung into existence) began to look about for a man to send afar into the heathen world, Dr. Barclay and his consecrated wife stepped out in answer to the call, became our first foreign missionaries, and started for the "City of the Great King," now the home of the mosque and the crescent.

Dr. James T. Barclay.

The journey of a missionary to the land of his labors was in those days a very different thing from that of a missionary of to-day, with the floating palaces that ply to all ports of the world. In a copy of the "Millennial Harbinger" of January, 1851, this stalwart old hero of the cross writes from London: "The good hand of the Lord being upon us, we reached this city on November 4, after an unusually short passage of twenty-one days. Though the voyage was so rough as to cause us much seasickness, and deprive me of the privilege of preaching more than once, it was yet, through the kindness of Capt. Hovey, a very pleasant one." He then tells how he applied to the Oriental and Peninsular Steamship Company for passage to a Mediterranean port, but finding their charges so exorbitantly high he was compelled to decline to take passage. He then continues: "I therefore took the cheapest lodgings that could be found of a respectable character and determined to wait awhile; nor was it long before I had the pleasure of finding a vessel advertised to sail direct to Jaffa in about a month. Judge, then, of our disappointment a day or two ago, on learning that the merchant who had chartered the vessel had decided to send his son, and would permit no others to go." He then tells how he engaged passage on the Hebe, of Glasgow, a little brig of 108 tons burden. "On this," he says, "we hope to reach Alexandria by the close of the year, stopping two weeks at Malta." The arrangements for traveling are interesting, as told in this letter. The passage and fare on board the Scotch brig, he says, is £75 (about $375) "or £37.10 if we do our own victualing, the captain supplying fuel and water." They accepted the latter, because it was cheaper, and, the writer adds, "you must not for a moment suppose that any of us deem this adventure a hardship."

Dr. Barclay's next letter is written from Malta, January 13, 1851. The interval between these dates (November, 1850, and January, 1851,) was spent on board the tiny brig, which was caught in a violent storm, and for sixty days was driven to and fro, lashed by furious breakers, and almost overwhelmed in the Bay of Biscay. From Malta the journey was continued in a small steamer to Beirut, where they arrived in the course of seven days. The last stage of their journey was now before them. They found they would have either to wait for some weeks at a heavy expense for the next steamer, or go on horseback to Jerusalem. They decided to go by the latter method, and notwithstanding heavy rains, and bad roads, the necessity of swimming the rivers, at the end of nine days they made their entry into old Jerusalem—the father, mother, two sons, and one little daughter—and thus it was, that our first missionary made this perilous journey to preach the Gospel to those who knew it not.

He spent four years in his chosen field—four years of eager and earnest work for his Master, came home on a furlough for three years, and then returned to his joyous life of service once more. This time he remained until the breaking out of the civil war in 1861, when he gave up the work at Jerusalem, saying "he did not wish to be a tax upon the brotherhood, or ask the church to support a missionary abroad during the troublous times at home."

During the period of his labors in Jerusalem, Dr. Barclay found time to write his well known book, "The City of the Great King," which is considered a work of able research and standard authority by scholars both in this country and England. Much of the information contained in this volume was obtained at great risk. At one time the author, in order to make some interesting measurements, had to enter forbidden enclosures, and crawl through on his hands and knees the old sewer which in ancient times conveyed the blood of sacrifices from the temple to the valley of Hinnom. He also discovered the ancient quarry underneath the city, from which the stones were hewn for Solomon's temple. On his return to this country, in 1865, Dr.

Barclay filled the chair of natural science in Bethany College for two years, and after resigning this position he went south to make his home with his children, where he spent the remaining years of his life, preaching and doing good. He died in 1874, and was buried in a little family cemetery, on his son, Robert's, plantation, in Alabama. Strangely enough, the old missionary who had traveled in many strange lands, and passed several times over strange and perilous seas, was destined to made one more journey before reaching his final resting place, and so on May 7 a little group, headed by his son and wife, Decima Campbell Barclay, and a widowed daughter-in-law, Mrs. Robert C. Barclay, gathered about his grave in the garden, where the same old colored man and others much attached to him, who had dug his grave, and helped to bury him thirty-two years ago, turned back the sod, and raised the casket to the light of day once more. Every thing was found intact, the casket in perfect condition, and the sleeper still lying at rest, as when first laid beneath the mound more than a score and a half of years gone by! Through the glass of the casket could be seen his beard, his black cravat, and black cloth coat, over which his arms were crossed as when laid to rest. A grayish white film obscured the face and features, otherwise he seemed to be sleeping as at first.

Thus the brave old knight of the cross, our first dear missionary, attended by his only son and daughter-in-law, made his last journey, to lie down with his loved ones in this little corner of the world, in old Bethany cemetery, so dear to Disciples of Christ all over the world. A more ideal day could not have been chosen for laying away the sacred dead, in the hope of a joyous resurrection—May 16—and the spot, too, where we laid him was ideal. On the slope of a green hillside, near the village of Bethany, overlooking the clear little stream, bending in graceful curves far below, lies a small plat of ground, just one acre—"God's acre"—enclosed by a massive stone wall. White shafts of marble and granite, bearing inscriptions sacred to those who sleep beneath, tell how an illustrious band have here "pitched in heaven's smile their camp of death."

A light of laughing flowers rested that day on the delicious green sward, the cheery dandelion spread here and there its golden mat, the white narcissus swayed in the soft air, tossing hints of delicate perfume around. Tall pines overhead held out their dark branches like mystic harps, to catch the music that lurks in every passing breeze. The hills that swept round, green with May, showed here and there snow-white tufts of "dog-wood," mingling with the soft flushes of "pinkbud," and over all bent the far blue of a mid-May sky and, circling below the base of the hills, the Buffalo gathered its noisy waters to rest here and there in still deep pools that reflected the azure above and the tender greening of spring along its margin. It was May time, nature's month of resurrection. The procession of life was moving in triumph along the hills of old Bethany. Those tall larches and pines are gathered protectingly around the old Campbell homestead, now the home of Dr. J. Judson and Mrs. Barclay, and there sits to-day a sweet faced, white haired, old woman of 93 winters; the weight of years is heavy upon her; she is too feeble to follow, this time, her loved one to the brink of an open grave, but ere long she, too, will climb the hill, to rest by his side. Thirty-two years ago she clasped hands with the still sleeper, and they parted; though he came back to join her there was no message on his lips; the stillness of years was unbroken. While the solemn scene went on in the hillside cemetery just above, she sat calmly, hopefully, by her open window and looked toward the west. The afternoon sun stretched a golden bar across the room to light her snowy hair and soft white cap, prophetic of a light so soon to break from other skies. Tears stole softly down her wrinkled cheeks, for she was thinking—"thinking of the days that are no more." Soon a gentle rustle will stir the border of time, the scenes will lightly shift, and "Grandma Barclay," who still loves to talk of the joys of the Master's service with her loved one, in the old Jerusalem, will join him in the immortal youthtime of the new Jerusalem, and to old Bethany's hillside cemetery will be added the sanctity of another missionary's grave.

At the quiet vesper hour on Tuesday evening, May 29, we held our final meeting of the "Mission study class" of Bethany College, beside the new-made grave. Short talks were made, missionary songs were sung, and prayers were offered, and from his letters there read the old missionary spoke to us again, of the perils by the way, and the joys of a deep, full life of service. And those who watched and prayed for him, and waited eagerly for the message of his long journey spoke to us also. They were around us here. W. K. Pendleton, who announced in "The Millennial Harbinger" the joyous news of Dr. Barclay's safe arrival in Jerusalem, was here in the still evening with us; that tall grey shaft of granite marks his place of rest; but he spoke, and we listened. Close by lies the great Alexander Campbell, whose heart burned within him as he cheered on the work from time to time, and we heard him urging the brethren to rally round the missionary, while his white shaft gleamed bright in the last rays of the setting sun. Truly we were all one living company in that quiet evening fall, and though some of us sat on the green banks, and spoke with lips of flesh, and caught the echo of our voices from the hills around, while others slumbered beneath, we were all an unbroken band; our joys and sorrows, our hopes and fears, joined hands across the dust of years. And the dead "came forth with singing, and gazing on us with soft eyes of newly comprehended sympathy, they stretched their white arms to us across the grave, in the solemn gladness of everlasting brotherhood."

Evening Prayer.

By Walter Scott Whitacre.

Dear Father, we do come to thee to-night
With hearts of thankfulness for all thy care,
And all the blessings that we now enjoy.
We thank thee for another day of life—
The day that but a few short hours ago
Was bright with sunshine's opportunities,
But now has sped to westward, while the night
Has dropped her curtains from the starry sky.

Not only for this day—for all the past,
Dear Father, do we render thee our thanks—
For all the days and years that we have lived
On earth. We thank thee for the blessed light
Of each succeeding day, resplendent all
With that superior light of truth revealed,
Which shines upon our heads and warms our hearts,
And lights the pathway to our heavenly home.

Dear Lord, we thank thee for thy loving care
Which, like a benediction, precious, sweet,
Has followed us from day to day throughout
The journey of our lives; and now we ask
Thy condescending grace to rest upon,
Be round about us and abide with us,
That we may dwell securely while we press
Toward the prize awaiting us in heaven.

And now, dear Father, while the shades of night
Are drawn about us, and we seek repose,
Be thou our soul's sweet guardian while we sleep;
And may our rest to-night renew our strength
For more of life and more of labor, more
Of consecrated service in thy cause.
These favors we invoke for Jesus' sake,
Who gave his precious life for ours. Amen.

Plea for Ideals.

The treasures of the ideal which are in the souls of others may be transmitted to our own. Let the world with its ugliness, its trials, and its pains experience the contact of the human soul, which, impregnated with the memory of heaven, is the creator of the ideal and of light. Some of our fathers who have passed before us along the ways, sometimes so hard, where we in our turn pass, have thrown their lights even up to the very portal of the tomb. They have put strength into weakness; have experienced that in poverty itself the springs of riches rise. In realizing the mystery which operated every day of their lives—that is to say, the transformation of outside incidents by means of the inward energies of the soul—they truthfully might have said, "We are poor, but with our energies we have enriched others."—Charles Wagner.

Ministerial Dignity[*] By Louis S. Cupp

The minister's first duty is to be a man; a clean, honorable, magnificent man. His second duty is to influence other men for good. All his acts should be in harmony with this two fold purpose of his life—his being the best and doing the noblest. Whatever compromises either his personal character or his personal influence is undignified and unbecoming.

True dignity is not an accessory of dress, not an accident of office or position, not eccentricity in look or demeanor. It does not originate in anything outward. Like the Kingdom of God it must begin within and gradually work itself outward until it permeates all that a man is and does. True dignity consists in a manly, Christlike character which irresistibly shines out, like an arc light, through the whole man. We might deduce this principle: The minister should do nothing that will compromise his character, his office or his influence.

This principle could be applied in detail to the various spheres of the preacher's activity, but I shall here discuss only two. I pass by the important theme of ministerial dignity in the pulpit, to say a few things about the dignity of the minister in his business and social relations.

I. The Minister in His Business Relation.

1. Shall the minister be a grafter? It has never seemed to me quite consistent with the dignity of the minister to ask or to receive the customary 10 per cent discount on his purchases. It cheapens the minister's office to ask it, and lessens his influence to receive it. It is therefore contrary to the law of dignity mentioned above, and should be abandoned. The world calls it a graft, and in these days of spiritual and political awakening, the term is unsavory. I am glad that many of our leading merchants and best preachers have discontinued this humiliating custom, and lift my voice in favor of its complete abolition.

2. Shall the minister be dishonest? It is a splendid business policy for the preacher to form early the habit of paying as he goes. Such a reputation will add to the dignity of his office and accelerate his influence for good in any community. It will become a means of spiritual grace for him and his church. Ministers are nearly always in debt, for the obvious reason that the churches are almost always in debt to the ministers. Ministers, as a rule, pay their debts—when the churches pay them. The minister usually lives within his salary when he can collect it, and without it when he can not.

Having said this much in defence of the preachers as a whole, a word might be added concerning the exceptional cases. The minister, in his endless itinerary from one pastorate to another, will learn, here and there, of some former "wearer of the cloth" who held the parish for a time and then left it with a number of unsettled accounts against him, and not even a verbal arrangement with his creditors for a future settlement. The world calls this dishonesty, and is it any the less censurable because practiced by a preacher? Perhaps it was mere carelessness, or forgetfulness, on the part of the preacher in the midst of the distractions of his departure. But strange no sober afterthought ever reminded him of his oversight, when calmly settled in his new field. Or it may be that his ecclesiastical highness habitually manifested a sublime indifference to such sublunary affairs as debits and credits, and he felt he could not afford to rasp his heavily weighted mind with systematic attention to such unholy things. But be the cause what it may, this I know, that his lax business methods have done much in many communities to lessen respect for ministers, and they cause many a business man to regard with some uneasiness a growing ministerial account on his ledger.

By way of suggestion, it might not be unwise for every pastor, on entering a new field, to make to his congregation some such speech as follows: "Brethren, I am a preacher but not a pauper, and I do not intend to submit to any pauperizing practices while in this community. I shall neither ask nor expect the customary discount of 10 per cent on my purchases from your merchants. I desire to stand on an equal business footing with the other members of this church. I expect to pay cash for every purchase, and not owe any man anything except love. I shall, therefore, expect you to pay me a living salary, and arrange to pay it promptly every week." I believe such a policy will commend itself to the best people in any church, and that its adoption will add to the minister's dignity and influence in the community.

II. The Minister in His Social Relations.

1. In this sphere the minister must be neither pompous nor silly. Both are dangerous extremes. There is no occasion for the minister to "put on airs" just because he is a minister. He is not a "lord of all creation," he is not even a master; he is a servant—a servant of the Most High God and of the people. The days when the minister must be always "white cravatted and stove-pipe hatted" and walk with a strut and a cane, are past, and it may, in justice to the people, be said that such ministerial pomposity no longer inspires the holy awe it once occasioned.

And the preacher should not be silly. Gravity and dignity should characterize his association with men and women. His speech should always be pure. No stories should ever be told to men which the minister would feel a hesitancy in repeating to a company of women. If the minister is the noble man, through and through, which I have tried to describe at the beginning, he will be able in his social relations to avoid the extremes of pomposity and silliness without danger of being regarded as a "Sissy."

2. In maintaining his dignity the minister must learn the delicate and difficult art of friendliness without familiarity. A sad feature of the minister's life is, that while he has many friends, he can have few associates. He lives mostly alone, does his work alone, faces his difficulties alone. He can have no real confidants outside his own family without danger. His burdened soul he must pour out in secret to his wife and his God. A minister would do well to recognize this stern fact and manfully accommodate himself to it.

In strenuous efforts to be "one of the boys" the minister is in danger of com-

THEY LAUGHED

At the Arguments on the Packages.

The husband of an Ohio woman brought home some packages of Grape-Nuts one evening, and there was much discussion, but let her tell the story.

"Two years ago I was thin and sickly and suffered so from indigestion, was very nervous, and could not sleep at night, I was not able physically or mentally to perform my duties and was constantly under the care of our physician. I had tried plain living and all the different remedies recommended by friends but got no better.

"One day my husband brought home two yellow boxes and said, 'The grocer wants us to try this food and report how we like it, he thinks it will help you.' I read all it said on the boxes about Grape-Nuts and I remember how I laughed at it, for I thought it foolish to think food could help me. But the next meal we all ate some with cream. We liked and enjoyed the deliciously crisp and new flavor so we kept on using Grape-Nuts, not because we thought it would cure me but because we liked it.

"At that time we had no idea what the results would be but now I am anxious to have the world know that to-day I am a well and strong woman physically and mentally. I gained over 30 pounds, do not suffer from any of the old ails and I know that it is to Grape-Nuts alone that I owe my restored health. They call me 'Grape-Nuts' here in the home and all of my friends have asked me the cause of it all. I have persuaded several of them to use Grape-Nuts and every one of them who has done so has been benefited and I wish it were in my power to induce every one who is sick to give this wonderful food a trial. We still have Grape-Nuts three times a day and never tire of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ten days on this nourishing and completely digestible food will show any one who is run down from improper feeding a great change, sometimes worth more than a gold mine because it may mean the joy and spring of perfect health in place of the old ails. Trial proves. "There's a reason."

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

I am not settling the exact location of any disputed point in the Holy City. Whether Gordon's Calvary, or the Calvary of the Holy Sepulchre may be the true Calvary, I am not deeply concerned. Both places have their interest to me, and perhaps their claims. Gordon's Calvary, I confess, is a little too English and too modern for my notions. It is a hill just outside the gate to the north of the city, and is said to meet all requirements. To the Jews it has been known for all time as the "place of stoning." It is outside the present wall, and not far from the Damascus gate, and the contour of the hill is not unlike the form of a skull. The Jews still spit toward this hill. It bears the name of Gordon's Calvary because General "Chinese Gordon" expressed his belief in it. Moody, Talmage and others have preached on the crest, and the Sunday-school convention of 1904 held a notable service there. It is said by the evangelists, "the sepulchre was nigh at hand," and recent excavations have shown a tomb on the side of the hill which is supposed by many to be the tomb of Joseph in which the body of our Lord was laid. This new Calvary may be the right one, but in my judgment the proof is by no means convincing.

For 1,600 years the spot covered by the Church of the Holy Sepulchre has been taken as the place of the crucifixion. The Romans had a temple to Venus here, erected 125 A. D., and the argument is made that Hadrian knew this spot was venerated by Christians and meant to desecrate it. The first church built here was dedicated in 336. The present structure dates back to 1810 and cost $3,000,000. Turkish guards hold the keys and are always about because of the constant disturbances among the Christian sects; Latin, Greek, Armenian, Syrian, Copt and Abyssinian churches, all having their particular shrines within the enclosure, and each regarding the others as intruders. The building is really a great religious museum, a series of connected chapels and shrines, thirty in number. One of these pretends to be the exact spot whence came the dust out of which Adam was created, and another, the grave of our common ancestor. Here Mark Twain wept over his departed relative—a distant relative, it is true, but a revered one. Here is the stone of unction where our Lord's body was anointed, and devout pilgrims are seen, Russians especially, covering it with kisses and measuring it that they may make their winding sheets of the same size. Then the place of the Parted Raiment, of the Crowning with Thorns, of the Scourging, with the pillar to which he was bound, the place where they nailed him to the cross, of the cleft rock, where the Virgin Mother received the body, and where Jesus appeared to Mary after his resurrection. These and the whole story of Helena's vision which fixed the location seem absurd to us. In the center of the rotunda is the most impressive thing in the church, the chapel of the sepulchre, the spot regarded for sixteen centuries by pilgrims as the most sacred spot on earth. They enter by a low door and prostrate themselves in tears, and kiss the marble slab under which they believe our Lord was buried. One thing is true, every one who thus shows his devotion shows the common faith, the world over, that Jesus died for our sins according to the Scriptures, that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures.

Whatever one may think of the disputes as to the location of Calvary, or of the superstitions connected with many things that are claimed here, he feels under this dome: "This is the holiest shrine in the Christian world." They say this could not have been the place of the crucifixion if it was always as now in the heart of the city, for Jesus went forth bearing his cross and suffered without the gate. But the walls have changed since then several times. Many authorities are positive that the site is genuine; and for sixteen centuries the spot has been held as the exact one by the whole Christian world, great wars have been waged for the possession of it, the great Crusades were undertaken to recover it, and a sanctuary like this must be one of the historical buildings of the world and can not be regarded without a feeling of veneration. Whether it be the spot of the entombment or not, that belief invests it with a tender interest. It is sacred. It has been consecrated by the faith and hope, the tears and prayers of generations. No one can enter it without a feeling of devotion. No one can stand within its portals without uncovered head and prayerful heart. No one can look upon the hosts of reverent worshipers, kneeling before God, and not rebuke himself for any indifference. Doubtless the multiplication of sacred places under this one roof leads to much of our incredulity, and throws the air of suspicion over all, as if it were all monkish fable and superstition; but this may be the spot; and after all, it is not a vital thing to know the exact place, nor does it in any way weaken our faith to be in doubt concerning this matter. "I know whom I have believed." It is the living Christ, and not the dead one, who is the way, the truth, and the life to men.

The place of crucifixion, like the place of burial, is included within the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. It is at the opposite end of the church in a recess or chapel by itself. As Golgotha was a rocky mound which looked down on the garden at its foot, in which was the new sepulchre, the chapel of the crucifixion is at an elevation above the pavement in a gallery reached by a stair. One ascends the steps of stone and sees at once an altar covered with votive offerings of gold and silver, which glisten in the light of lamps suspended over it. It is sombre enough. A kind of sepulchral gloom which the lights can not dispel is about you as if the darkness still lingered where the Lord expired. Calvary is the center which attracts all worshipers. It is an impressive place. One revolts against all the glitter and tinsel, yet, the thought of the cross and of the Sinless Sufferer fills him with reverence and awe. What are all our ambitions, triumphs, successes; all our trials and sufferings; our pilgrimages up and down the earth; our petty animosities and differences and rivalries; our race distinctions and sect distinctions—what are they in the presence of the cross?

THE OLD PLEA

He "Didn't Know it was Loaded."

The coffeedrinker seldom realizes that coffee contains the drug Caffein, a serious poison to the heart and nerves causing many other forms of disease noticeably dyspepsia.

"I was a lover of coffee and used it for many years and did not realize the bad effects I was suffering from its use.

"At first I was troubled with indigestion but did not attribute the trouble to the use of coffee but thought it arose from other causes. With these attacks I had sick headache, nausea and vomiting. Finally my stomach was in such a condition I could scarcely retain any food.

"I consulted a physician; was told all my troubles came from indigestion, but was not informed what caused the indigestion, so I kept on with the coffee and kept on with the troubles, too, and my case continued to grow worse from year to year until it developed into chronic diarrhea, nausea and severe attacks of vomiting so I could keep nothing on my stomach and became a mere shadow reduced from 159 to 128 pounds.

"A specialist informed me I had a very severe case of catarrh of the stomach which had got so bad he could do nothing for me and I became convinced my days were numbered.

"Then I chanced to see an article setting forth the good qualities of Postum and explaining how coffee injures people so I concluded to give Postum a trial. I soon saw the good effects—my headaches were less frequent, nausea and vomiting only came on at long intervals and I was soon a changed man, feeling much better.

"Then I thought I could stand coffee again, but as soon as I tried it my old troubles returned and I again turned to Postum. Would you believe it, I did this three times before I had sense enough to quit coffee for good and keep on with the Postum; the result is I am now a well man with no more headaches, sick stomach or vomiting and have already gained back to 147 pounds." # Bolengi's First Out-Station

By Mrs. Royal J. Dye

Across on the opposite bank of the Congo and down the river from Bolengi, a full day's hard paddling, is a small section of country called Bokonji, composed of a few scattered villages. Being on the way to Bobangi, where the evangelists were stationed until that work was transferred to the Baptist Missionary Society, they always stayed over a night or two in these villages, both coming and going, preaching to the people. From these occasional visits several became interested and came home with the evangelists to see if it were really true that this new story changed people's lives. They saw and believed, and begged for a teacher to come and stay with them at Bonkombo, the farthest of the Bokonji villages. They said: "If you do not come and we die without being saved, we will tell God it is your fault." When teachers were sent to them they said: "Now it is in our own hands to choose or to refuse."

While God was kindling a fire of longing in their hearts he was also preparing some one to satisfy it. July 31, 1904, there were several baptisms, among them being a man, Ekakula, and his wife, Biluke ("there are many"). These were among the most earnest and intelligent of any yet admitted to the church. Their history is interesting. Biluke, when a small child, lost her mother and went to live with a relative who was very unkind to her, beating her and refusing her food because she brought no income. When about 12 years of age her father, who hitherto had shown no care for her, married her to a mere boy, receiving in return a marriage fee of twenty slaves, one woman and nineteen men, who were then valued at 1,500 brass rods each, making the total sum equal to about $300. This child-marriage continued several years, a babe was born and died, and finally the husband died, leaving her as an inheritance to a native chief, Ibuka, the worst polygamist in the country, his harem numbering even now some 200 wives. This man Biluke hated, and ran away on a state steamer with her brother. This steamer was bound for Stanley Falls, and during the trip a young lead's man admired her and went to her brother, asking for her. The brother interceded for him, but she had determined never again to go to a man having other wives, and only after being satisfied that he had none and desired but her did she relent. One day he offered her 100 brass rods to buy food, and she accepted, which was an acknowledgement of her willingness to become his wife. On their return to Stanley Pool, where he was in the employ of the Congo State, they were legally married, and there remained until his contract was finished. At this place there is also a station of the Congo Balolo Mission and, hearing the bell ring every evening, Ekakula wondered at the meaning of it and went several nights, always standing outside, listening to the singing, and as soon as it was over, running as fast as ever he could to get away without being caught, for he thought outsiders were forbidden. He heard that near his own home on the upper river the same teaching was being taught, so they determined to find out the meaning when they went home. He had been in his own village but a week when he was seized by a sentry and put into chains with a number of others, for state tax of fish being short. When released they went to Lulanga, another C. B. M. station, seventy miles above us, and there they attended services for some time, but it was so far from their home that they finally came here and remained until after their baptism.

Mrs. R. J. Dye, Bolengi, Africa.

Having accepted Christ as their Savior, they were both anxious to fit themselves to teach others, so he attended the evangelists' class, and in October they departed for Bonkombo, to remain two months. Their first two months over, they returned to Bolengi enthusiastic over the work and desiring to go back another two months. They were on their fourth term of two months when we had opportunity to visit this new work. Two young missionaries of a sister society were staying with us while waiting for the governor-general's permission for their marriage by Congo law. They had come some 500 miles by canoe and had waited already a month, so we made our plans to go with their canoe, it being much larger than any here. This canoe was about 30 feet long by 3 feet wide, and was rather more crowded than most picnic excursions, containing twenty-three paddlers, a drummer boy, an orphanage girl, and us four white people, with all our outfit for a week's absence. We left Bolengi early in the morning, the paddlers were fresh and the canoe, though heavily laden, cut quickly through the water. We crossed the river and reached the first of the Bokonji villages at 10:30 a. m. The land there is much higher, and to reach the village, which is on top of a bank rising straight out of the water, crude rope ladders are provided. We stopped there to leave two Christian men to preach and teach until our return. This we did at each village, having plenty of volunteers, as the entire crew were Christians. Early in the afternoon we reached our destination, having made unusually good time with the big crew of paddlers. We received a warm welcome, and were escorted to our abiding place and spread our lunch immediately, with crowds of interested spectators. Ekakula and Biluke were as pleased to see us as though we had been their own parents. They helped us put up our beds under an open building of the old chief, Bokatula. At sunset a little bell was rung and the people gathered in large numbers to the open air service. We were joyfully surprised to see so many. An ideal meeting in God's own great auditorium, lighted with the moon and myriads of stars. After the service all seemed reluctant to break up and go home. We were glad for our night's rest, and were but little disturbed by the unusual sounds of wild animals near at hand. Next morning there was a sunrise prayer-meeting, then after our breakfast we went through the village, visiting the people. Whole sections have been made desolate by the ravages of sleeping sickness. We took pains to visit one section from which Biluke said the women would never attend the services. The paddlers had gone off into the forests near by hunting, and when at noon we had taken refuge from the heat down by the riverside, they returned with a gorilla and babe, killed not far away. About 1 o'clock all those who had signified their desire to become Christians came for a conference with us. At 4 p. m. we gathered all the women together, going personally to escort those who had never come before, until forty were present. It is seldom our privilege to tell the old yet new story of the Savior to such a hungry, eager audience. It was of untold blessing to us, as well as to them, for there were no listless, indifferent hearers among them all. At sundown the general service was held at which several older Christians spoke, encouraging those just beginning, and urging the others not to delay. Dr. Dye closed it with a few words of commendation and exhortation as our farewell message to them.

During the day we went to see the site selected by the evangelist for the little church and their own home, for they had decided to settle there and live to teach those people, thus becoming home missionaries. Next morning we bade them farewell, packed ourselves once more into the canoe and pulled away from the shore, as they were singing, "There's a Land That is Fairer Than Day," in their own language. We were more heavily laden than before, because of certain tubs of monkey and gorilla meat stowed away between the rows of paddlers. We had numerous gifts of ducks and chickens tied to the canoe as well, so the motion did not conduce to tranquility. The return journey up stream against the swift current is necessarily about twice as long, so at 2 p. m. we anchored at Mpombo in a driving rain and remained there over night. Our quarters here were more commodious, as the young chief took us to a very large house built by his father but never finished, as he was killed by a leopard and buried inside his new house, where glass bottles, old dishes and an old gun decorated the grave. Just in front of the grave, in the middle of the room, were two carved pillars which we admired until we were informed that they were stocks where the chief's wives and slaves were tied to be whipped. No native will ever live in this house again, as it is the tomb of the old chief. There is but little real interest in the Gospel there, but we had good services and personal talks with the people. Early the following morning we left there for home. At noon we stopped for dinner under the shade of a gigantic tree whose roots reached far out into the river. The shore all along has many such trees, looking like huge landmarks. When within a short distance from Bolengi, where we had to cross the river, a terrible tropical tornado came up, and before we could get to shore it seemed as though we should surely be swamped. The river was black and boiling down upon us, as though having burst its bounds. The blackness of the water was reflected in the sky, the whole being lighted up by the blinding flashes of lightning. Soon big drops of rain fell and the wind and waves became quieter, so we continued our journey home, and arrived about 4 p. m., having suffered nothing worse than a severe drenching. Home is home the world over, and we were thankful to be there once more, and we heartily enjoyed the good, hot dinner awaiting us.

Dr. Royal J. Dye, our Medical Missionary at Bolengi, Haut Congo, Africa.

One month later five young people were baptized from Bonkombo, having come home with Ekakula for that purpose. When he returned they went with him, and since then they together have built a little chapel and school house, where regular services and day school are daily held, and are increasing in interest and attendance. At Christmas time, when all the evangelists and teachers and Christians return to Bolengi for a yearly reunion, several more will be baptized from over there.

Surely there is some one who will like to become associated with this work now in its beginning, so as to share in its triumphs later on. Perhaps some one who does not care to contribute to foreign missions will gladly help in this home mission work for Africa. The country which sheltered Christ from the wrath of Herod must be indeed a home mission field to him. It would cost but $40 a year to support this evangelist and his wife. Who will do it?

As Seen From the Dome.

At the foot of the cross all things sink into nothingness.

"In the cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'er the wrecks of time;
All the light of ancient story

We are not much concerned about the site of Calvary; we are concerned about the Crucified One. Christ and Him Crucified is the hope of the race. "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, he is risen."

Another place of profound interest here is Gethsemane; but here the competitive claims of Greek and Roman churches intrude themselves. There are two Gethsemanes. One thing we are satisfied about, the original Garden was there and doubtless included both, and there are very old olive trees there, which are held sacred, and in the calm and quiet of evening it seems indeed a holy place. I did not tire of it. Another spot which we know and which tells a sweet and sacred story, is the Mount of Olives. It is the most sacred of all mountains. In Old Testament times it was associated with the worship of Jehovah, and here David found refuge from the enmity of Absalom. With our Lord, however, it was a favorite retreat, where whole nights were spent in prayer, and as the place of his ascension it has a thrilling significance to his disciples. Around the world one will not find a more beautiful prospect than from this holy hill. To the west, beautiful for situation, Jerusalem and its panorama of hills and valleys; to the east, the Dead Sea nearly 4,000 feet below, and the whole Jordan valley, stretching along the shores of that sacred stream, and beyond, the towering mountains of Moab with Nebo and Pisgah; north, the mountains of Benjamin, and south the wilderness of Judea. The beautiful mount is disfigured greatly by chapels, shrines and towers; one, a Paternoster chapel, with the Lord's prayer inscribed on large panels in thirty-two languages. The mount is a place where one would wish to be alone with Christ.

"'Tis midnight, and on Olive's brow
The star is dimmed that lately shone;
'Tis midnight, in the garden now
The suffering Savior prays alone."

Apart from these places of interest and instruction Jerusalem abounds in scenes and memorials that fascinate the visitor. Time fails me to tell of the gates and walls, of the Wall of Wailing, where on Fridays the poor Jews gather to bewail the desolation of Jerusalem and to pray for the restoration of its glory, reading the mournful chapters of Lamentations, and putting nails in the cracks to represent distant Jews, of the pools of Siloam, Bethesda and Hezekiah, of the Via Dolorosa, and the Tower of David, and Solomon's Quarries, and the Tombs of the Kings; of churches and institutions. "Palestine," one has said, "is a stringed instrument, every touch upon which brings forth some sweet and musical sound." Jerusalem, the city of the Great King, is the center of all this history and memory and promise.

Ministerial Dignity.

promising the very influence he hopes to strengthen. The end is defeated by the means employed. Many people, and they are usually the most undesirable sort, are disposed to take advantage of such a show of friendliness to become distastefully familiar. Speaking of familiarity recalls the saying of Fred Emerson Brooks, who says that some people have this bump so abnormally developed that if they should meet the Great Desert of Sahara in the middle of the road they would slap her familiarly on the back and call her "Sally."

THEREFORE, when we can not understand a matter, faith will remember the divine art of hiding; it will not so there is no God, He does not care; it will not say the thing is meaningless; but it will bow the head in this mysterious universe, and say it is the glory of God to conceal a thing. So do we learn to be reverent and humble, and to await bravely the breaking of the dawn, for then, when the long shadows are departed, we shall know even as we are known.—G. H. Morrison.

Current Literature

Religion of Mission Fields as Viewed by Protestant Missionaries. Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, 1905. New York. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 35 cents.

This work has been prepared to supplement two others of similar character upon non-Christian religions for use in the classes of the Student Volunteer Movement for foreign missions. These chapters, devoted to the religions of the different mission fields as described by missionaries on the field are vivid, life-like, and we have no doubt, true to fact. While of general interest to all who have an intelligent knowledge of the various mission fields, and the conditions with which our missionaries have to cope, the book is of special interest to mission classes that are engaged in studying the different mission fields. Such works as this, it seems to us, are quite essential to intelligent work in the mission fields. This work is the product of ten prominent missionaries, most of whom have had experience ranging from twenty to forty years in various mission fields that enables them to speak authoritatively upon religions with which they have been in daily contact and to which they have given years of study. It is arranged conveniently for consultation and each chapter contains a bibliography that would be very helpful to those who wish to pursue these studies further.

On Holy Ground: Bible Stories with Pictures of Bible Lands. By William L. Worcester. Philadelphia and London. J. B. Lippincott Co., 1904.

One of the best ways of teaching the Bible to children is by telling or reading them its stories. The Bible stories in this beautiful volume are told in language adapted to children, and the illustrations are very fine. The stories run through both the Old and New Testaments, and the child who becomes familiar with them knows most of the great characters and great events of Bible history. It will prove a valuable aid to Bible study in any home where there are children, and even older persons will read these stories with both interest and profit.

The Bible, Its Origin and Nature: Seven Lectures Delivered Before Lake Forest College On the Foundation of the late William Bross, by the Rev. Marcus Dods, D.D., Professor of Exegetical Theology in New College, Edinburgh. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Price, $1 net.

This volume contains the Bross lectures for 1904. Dr. Dods needs no introduction to American readers. He is known to most readers of religious and theological books as one of the clearest writers and most profound thinkers of the men now living. His volume on the Bible will add to his reputation. The lucidity of his style as well as his irenic spirit at once gives the reader a touch of the quality which makes him a general favorite with those who read theological and religious books. Dr. Dods uses the results of modern criticism as far as he thinks well to do so, but he does not break with traditional views except where the facts are overwhelmingly against these views. He is one of the few men who write on the subject, who keep an open mind but subject everything to a careful judicial examination. His present book is of special value at this particular time when the Bible is being subjected to all kinds of critical investigation.

History Unveiling Prophecy, or Time as an Interpreter. By H. Grattan Guinness, D.D., Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. Price, $2 net.

This is a handsome volume from the printer's point of view, and it is packed full of information on the subject of which it treats. Prophecy has always had considerable interest for Christians. It has been regarded as one of the strong bulwarks of the Christian faith, and while recently there has been a disposition to consider this kind of testimony as of less value than other sources of evidence, it may be seriously questioned whether this tendency to surrender to some extent this side of apologetics is not after all very poor tactics. But, however this may be, it is unquestionably true that Dr. Guinness has made it abundantly evident that prophecy, rightly interpreted, is of immense importance in establishing the claims of Christian religion. It is difficult to examine the array of facts which he produces without reaching the conclusion that the Christ of history is none other than the Christ of prophecy, and that the events described in prophecy have had their exact fulfillment in the history which followed.

Of course, much nonsense has been written on prophecy, and this fact has had a strong tendency to make even devout expositors of the Bible go to another extreme, and regard prophecy as of no very great value in proving the Christian religion. But the abuse of anything is not conclusive evidence against its use. No doubt the prophetic side of the Bible has been greatly abused,, but so has nearly every other side of the Bible, though perhaps no other side has furnished such an opportunity for the display of idiocy as has the prophecies of the Bible. Dr. Guinness adopts the historic method, and in this respect he places himself in company with the ablest expositors of both ancient and modern times. It is no longer doubtful, in the minds of those who weigh carefully facts, that the historic method of treating prophecy is the only one that yields satisfactory results. In the volume before us we have the most mature reflections of a very able man, who has made the study of prophecy a specialty for many years. He is, indeed, an authority on the subject, and his present book will help to emphasize the authoritative character of his writings.

The Truth about the Mutual Life

THIS is a matter of great interest to the public, and of still greater interest to thousands of individuals. People with the fairest minds—and that means most people—have been disturbed and unsettled by the developments and denunciations of the past few months. What these people want is the truth—the plain unvarnished truth. To give them this truth is the object of this announcement.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company was organized in 1843, the first of its kind in America. In 24 years it had become the largest in the world. For 39 years, in spite of the keenest competition, it has held the lead, passing unharmed through panics, failures, strikes and wars; meeting with promptness its every obligation and having 460 millions of assets to-day.

The recent Insurance agitation was unique. The investigation certainly was thorough. As every one knows the Mutual Life was on the firing line. The smoke has now cleared away. What do we find?

In the first place we find that the Mutual Life is still the largest and staunchest Life Insurance Company in the world. Without defending or the least belittling the abuses and extravagances recently brought to light, everybody should keep in mind the fact that the solvency of this Company has not for a moment been affected thereby. Concerning the work of the finance committee which has been attacked in the press, this Company's auditing committee consisting of Messrs. Truesdale, Auchincloss, Fish and Dixon stated on February 15th, 1906:

> "The Committee certify that the investments of the Company are of the highest order and well selected," and "have found the valuation given safe and conservative, in many instances less than the market value and in none in excess of such value."

In the next place, extravagance has been stopped, and those responsible for it have gone; a new management has been installed, and retrenchments have been effected that have already saved vast sums of money and will save much more as time goes on. Legislative reforms have likewise been anticipated, and the Company is now as sound at the circumference as it always has been at the core.

In the next place, the ending of the first quarter presents an excellent opportunity for comparing this year with last.

> The amount paid policy holders is $9,608,436.50, an increase of $1,070,835.26. The receipts for premiums were $15,082,484.57, a decrease of $857,995.29 for the period. This is a shrinkage of less than 5½ per cent. The amount paid for expenses was $2,935,552.44, a reduction of $1,547,279.36.

This remarkable showing is a good thing to be kept in mind by everybody—those now insured in the Mutual Life, and those who should be. It cannot be accounted for by the smaller amount of new business written. Of the saving for the quarter, the sum of $390,961.52 is in items not connected with the obtaining of new business.

In the next place we find that this Company is doing business—more business than any other company in the world with one exception. Far from being paralyzed or demoralized it is forging right ahead. Policies by the hundred are being written each day; honest trustees, keenly alert, are directing its affairs; faithful and experienced men are doing its intricate work; loyal agents are explaining its advantages and discriminating people are obtaining its protection.

In the next place we find that there need be no question as to the future. A policy in the Mutual Life is just as good as gold. No obligation could possibly be better. A bond of the United States Government is no safer. It will, therefore, be a misfortune if any one is misled by the writer who prints for revenue or for notoriety, or by the attorney who is out for his clients, or the competitor who is out for himself, or even by the gentlemen who have organized themselves into committees under an honest misapprehension of the facts. Such incidents may tend to hinder business, but need deter no one who needs insurance.

With economy, which means rapid improvement in regard to earning of surplus for dividends, everywhere at work in the Mutual Life; with its immense size as the basis for moderate general expenses; with smaller liability for renewal commissions to agents than any other company; with the cost of new business limited by law for all Companies, how can any one possibly better provide for the uncertainties of the future than through a policy in the first Insurance Company in America, and the strongest in the world.

Our Budget

—A report of the Missouri convention next week.

—We are indebted to Bro. G. L. Bush and Bro. A. L. Clinkenbeard for their promptness in sending in their report of the Texas convention. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST does not care for padded news columns, but it wants the real news of our churches and this it nearly always publishes from a week to six months ahead of its contemporaries.

—We count ourselves fortunate in the publication this week of two articles by women workers. That by Sister Dye tells graphically of the work in the Dark Continent. And when has there appeared in any of our papers such a charming article as that by Mrs. A. R. Bourne? This practically conceived description of "our first missionary" and the removal of his body to Bethany will be read with moistened eyes.

—J. B. Briney has been debating at Hunter, Okla.

—S. M. Perkins has left Valisca, Ia., to take the work at Albia.

—G. G. Borsot, of Louisville, Ky., who has been sick, is again able to be about the house.

—A. T. Fitts has relinquished the work at Gravity, Ia., in order to study at Drake University.

—D. R. Dungan was nominated for secretary of state by the Prohibition convention of Iowa.

—Marcellus Ely inspected THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST plant on his way to enter upon the pastorate at Charleston, S. C.

—E. H. Rayner has removed from Worcester, Mass., and will take work in the Bible College, Lexington, Ky.

—R. L. Prewitt, who was for ten years a missionary in Japan, has returned to Tennessee where he expects to remain.

—A new church has just been organized at Meridian, Idaho. That makes the eighth church in the southern part of the state.

—S. J. Vance recently held a meeting at Westville, I. T., in which much good was accomplished. The Methodist Episcopal church was used.

—H. H. Peters, of Rossville, Ill., has accepted a call from the church at Dixon, and will begin his service with that congregation August 1.

—C. E. Chambers had about one hundred additions in his last year at Mystic, Ia. He is now in charge of the Davis Street Church at Ottumwa.

—The annual camp meeting of the Inland Missionary Society is being held at Cheney, Wash. We shall hope to receive a report of the proceedings.

—W. L. Harris recently organized a new church at Allendale, Mo., after a special meeting in which twenty were added. The meeting was held in the Baptist church.

—The work at Rockwood City and Jolly, Ia., is taking on a hopeful aspect under H. Brown's ministrations, the congregations and interest increasing with every meeting.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST staff recently had a pleasant visit from Lew D. Hill and wife, who have been engaged in evangelistic work in southern Illinois. It is Brother Hill's desire to locate with some good church at no distant date. He may be addressed at Eureka, Ill.

—George L. Snively, of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, will dedicate the new church edifice at Lansdowne, Ill., the first Lord's day in July. The brethren from surrounding communities are invited. C. O. Reynard is the successful pastor of this congregation.

—The church at Rushsylvania, O., where S. L. Lyon is pastor, is about ready to begin work on a new cement block building, and 75 per cent of the estimated cost is already pledged.

—The convention of the northeast Arkansas missionary district will be held at Stuttgart July 10-12. There will be free entertainment for all, and names should be sent to J. F. Whaley.

—Prof. Walter Stairs has been asked to take charge of the ministerial training school which the brethren of Australia have decided to establish in connection with one of the universities there.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Hannibal, Mo., June 18.—Greatest convention for many years, not in numbers alone but in enthusiasm and results. Not less than 800 delegates present. The churches have been filled to-day with visiting ministers. Hannibal covering herself with glory in her unstinted hospitality. C. W. B. M. has closed the most successful convention in its history, surpassing its aim on every count. They aimed to increase the membership to 4,600, and raised it to 4,954. They aimed to increase the number of Tidings in the state to 2,000, and raised the number to 2,730. They placed their mark in money at $12,000, and raised $13,900. They unanimously re-elected old officers. Mrs. H. A. Denton makes a splendid presiding officer. Mrs. Moses and Mrs. Atwater were present and added greatly to the enthusiasm of the convention. Great union communion service at Christian church Sunday afternoon, E. J. Lampton preaching and S. B. Moore presiding. An overflowing Model Endeavor meeting conducted at 7 o'clock. —Brethren Dinger and Gardner have been engaged for a campaign at Hartford City, Ind. They recently gave a week of sermons in song at Marion, Ind., which seem to have been highly appreciated.

—G. W. Ford, of West Salem, Ill., writes that this congregation is enjoying great prosperity. He believes that very soon a new house of worship will be one of the manifestations of this prosperity.

—B. F. Cato writes that in one year the building fund at New Albany, Ind., has gained $8,298 in actual cash. As soon as the brethren are able to purchase a location they will enter actively upon the new building enterprise.

—D. S. Domer, after a long spell of sickness and several operations, seems to have entirely recovered his strength, and wishes to enter the field again. Any church wishing to hold meetings may address him at Beaver City, Neb.

—B. H. Morris has just celebrated the first anniversary of his pastorate at Water Valley, Miss. During the year there were forty-one additions, and $1,300 raised for all purposes. E. S. Baker and Leonard Daugherty have just begun a meeting.

—Nearly all the members of our little church at Saminas, Mexico, are tithers, three of them giving for missions during one month $34.25. Each month their offerings have increased until now they are more than double what they were at first.

—W. M. Taylor is temporarily supplying the pulpit of the Soniat Avenue Church, New Orleans. He writes in highest praise of the work accomplished there by Bro. Marcellus Ely. Prospects are bright for this becoming one of our strongest southern churches.

—"We have just ordered seventy-five copies of Gloria in Excelsis, and are highly pleased with them. This book fills a much needed place in our worship. Brethren, do away with your cheap music and use books that give dignity and interest to the services."—R. S. Robertson, pastor.

Professor Dean, of Hiram College, sails on June 19 on the steamship Caronia for England, where he will spend the summer. His daughter, Miss Allie M. Dean, is studying art in Italy and will return with him in time to take up the art class again at the opening of the college in the fall.

—F. P. Arthur, of Grand Rapids, Mich., writes us that, as a labor of love, he is preparing a life of Dr. Robert Richardson, who wrote the "Memoirs of Campbell," and requests that any one who may have letters or memories of him or his work will send them to him at 148 Grand avenue, Grand Rapids.

—The Vine Street Church, Nashville, one of the strongest, if not the strongest Christian Church in Tennessee, is still without a minister. Our other two churches, the Woodland Street, under R. Lin Cave, and the Seventeenth Street, under H. L. Patterson, are making good progress.

—John D. Zimmerman ministers to the church at Horton, Kan. The brethren are determined to pay off this year, entirely, an old debt which has been running for fifteen years. One-third of the obligation has just been met. All departments of the church are making steady gains and the outlook is encouraging.

—The churches in southern California are beginning already to plan for a great revival campaign next April. It is proposed to divide the efforts: first, the churches in Los Angeles county will be engaged, and later those outside of the county. A dozen or fifteen of the best evangelists in the brotherhood wil take part.

—Sumner T. Martin, recently of Pasadena, Cal., has accepted the position of city evangelist, under the direction of the Chicago City Missionary Board. His address will be 407 Association Building, Chicago. Brother Martin is well adapted to this work, and we confidently expect great results from his labors.

—We regret very much to chronicle the death of Mrs. Raymond Scott, of this city, during a visit to her childhood home at Atlanta, Ga. She is another of the faithful ones who has entered before us into the better land.

—Our brethren at Valley Falls, Kan., want to add strength to the cause by securing some additions who are established in the faith. S. M. Strawn will give particulars as to the church facilities and the opportunities for any members of our church who may wish to consider moving to Valley Falls, Jefferson county, Kan.

—A Bible school contest is waging between the churches of Jacksonville and Paris (Illinois). The average attendance of the former for thirteen weeks has been 689, and the average offering over $50. There are thirty-five organized classes. Clarence L. Depew has been the efficient superintendent for ten years.

—The second annual assembly of the Dexter (Mo.) Chautauqua is to be held August 1-10, 1906. The one held last year was successful enough to warrant the continuation of the assembly. .Several notable speakers have been engaged. It is held under the management of Charles E. Stokes, 1123 East Twelfth street, Kansas City, Mo.

—Bro. John Luttenberger preached his farewell sermon at Bonne Terre, Mo., last Lord's day. During his two years' ministry there the house has been greatly improved and the membership more than doubled. There were three additions at the last service. Brother Luttenberger is entering upon the active practice of medicine.

—Ernest J. Bradley, of Smithville, Tex., has resigned as state evangelist under the Texas Christian Missionary Society, and is open for work as an independent evangelist or as pastor. Brother Bradley served the church at Smithville for three years and a half, closing his work the first of January. He is a graduate of Texas Christian University.

—We regret to learn that the eldest daughter of Brother and Sister P. G. Cross has been taken from them. Bro. J. N. Jessup, of Little Rock, in conducting the funeral services, brought a message of comfort and uplift. The work at Hope, Ark., has advanced so rapidly under the ministrations of Brother Cross that the present building will have to be enlarged.

—The brethren at Star City, Ind., recently celebrated the thirty-ninth anniversary of their congregation which is an outgrowth of a Bible school started some forty years ago. Three of the seventeen charter members are still living and were present on this occasion. The church is now out of debt and has a good, up-to-date building. J. E. W. Luckey is the pastor.

—Bro. Charles Reign Scoville is to begin a union revival meeting in Monroe, Wis., August 1, to continue one month. The Monroe Ministerial Association has secured the use of the armory, the largest auditorium in the city, for the meeting. Bro. J. H. Berkey, the pastor of the Union Church of that place, asks the prayers of the brethren for the success of this meeting.

—A new church of thirty-five members, a Bible school and Christian Endeavor society has been organized at Meridian, Idaho, by George C. Ritchey, state evangelist, and a pastor called and lots decided upon. Boise and Nampa churches sent representatives on the night of the organization. Brother Ritchey had to preach in an upstairs room, but had a good audience. His next meeting is at Nampa.

—C. W. Culbertson writes us that the Central Church at Shelbyville, Ind., having recently purchased a beautiful lot in a desirable part of the city for the purpose of starting a new work, is making preparation for the meeting to be held by W. E. Harlow. H. H. Harmon has been supplying during the absence of the pastor, H. O. Pritchard, who is taking a special course at Yale University.

—Educational week at Galesburg, Ill., will conclude to-morrow. It began with speeches by F. D. Thompson and Nelson G. Brown on "Our Own Colleges," and the "Heroism of Education." Others taking part were Marion Stevenson, B. J. Radford, Dr. Thomas McClelland, of Knox College; Dr. L. B. Fisher, of Lombard College, Rev. Albert Schwartz, Mrs. S. J. Crawford and Mrs. Maud M. Conklin.

—As an appreciation of faithful service during the building of the splendid new church house at Jacksonville, Ill., the pastor, Russell F. Thrapp, has been voted an eight weeks' vacation by the congregation and presented with a check for $500. Brother Thrapp will make a tour of the West with his family, visiting Yellowstone Park, Portland, Los Angeles and other interesting points.

—A minister in another religious body writes, inquiring the subscription rate of The Christian-Evangelist, saying, "I have read several of the letters of Mr. Durban, of London, and feel that I can keep in touch with the religious world of England better through these letters than any other source available to me." Our valued London correspondent is in this country at present, but will soon return to his native land.

—A. O. Swartwood, pastor of our church at Miller, S. D., and president of the State Missionary Society, has been doing a good work. He has been with his present congregation over three years, during which time the building has been remodeled, the property improved by the laying of cement sidewalks, the installation of electric lights, and a new organ. Great credit is due to the business men of the church for they have heartily supported Brother Swartwood not only in the work at Miller, but in his evangelistic efforts at other places.

—"The Berean Helper," of Temple, Texas, still makes its appearance, printed in better form and on better paper. It is devoted to the promotion of Bible study. The following is its Berean pledge:

By the help of the Lord, I will................ read through the New Testament at least one time within one year from now.
Name ..........................................
Address ......................................
................................................
Date ..........................................

We trust a large host of readers will join with Brother Easterwood, the editor, in carrying out this pledge.

—J. E. Lynn has just observed his second anniversary as pastor of our congregation at Warren, O., where during his two years' service 292 have been added to the congregation, 150 of them by baptism. The present membership is 1,170. Plans looking toward the establishment of a second congregation are well under way. The total amount of money raised during his pastorate was $15,777, of which $4,628 were for missions. On a roll call on children's day of the boys and girls who were members of the church some seventy-five responded.

—W. H. Waggoner has prepared a map in the interest of the C. W. B. M. work, and an atlas helpful to an understanding of mission points of the Disciples of Christ all over the world. Brother Waggoner has made a special study of our wide field and his services in the way of institute work and lectures have been helpful to the cause and enlightening to many churches all over the country.

—Bruce Brown has just moved into his own home, being tired of renting. He evidently feels that he has still a work to do at Mansfield, O., and we understand that he is doing the best work of his life. The church has big opportunities. Among the recent subjects of sermons by Brother Brown we note, "If I Were a Woman;" "If a Man Goes to Hell From Mansfield Who Cares—Whose Fault is It?" "The Coming Woman and the Going Man;" "The Coming Man and the Going Woman." These, of course, are special messages to the family circle.

—A copy of the local church paper of the First Christian Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 10, gives encouraging reports of the progress of the church in all departments, showing a very healthy condition. The children's day offering was $300. Bro. G. B. Van Arsdall is delighted with the work there, and speaks of the church as a "most noble company of people." The church has adopted the individual communion service during the year, and has organized a men's club which has held three banquets. We can testify to the splendid personnel of this church.

—C. M. Sala writes very glowingly of the meeting held by E. E. Violett at Minerva, O., which was closed owing to the breaking out of a malignant form of diphtheria. There were eighty-one confessions and people were frequently being turned away from the house by reason of its 600 seats not being able to accommodate all who wanted to attend. "Mr. Violett, during his short stay here, endeared himself to every member of the church. His presence was inspiring. * * * The board met last evening and decided, under his leadership, to take the work up again September 1."

—Plans have been drawn for a new building of the Third Christian Church at Youngstown, O. It will stand on the site of the present building, which will be removed, having become entirely inadequate. The new structure will be of stone and brick. The congregation was planted by the Welch Missionary Society of Mahoning and Trumball counties. Allenson Wilcox was chosen as evangelist. The present building was erected in 1900. The work is now in charge of F. D. Draper, who had fifty-three additions in eleven months, and to whom much credit is due for the present activity of the church.

—The missionary convention of the sixth district, Illinois, will be held at Farmer City, June 26-28. One of the features of the program is a symposium on district work by counties. Harold E. Monser is to preach the convention sermon. F. W. Burnham speaks on Education, S. E. Fisher on Christian Endeavor, J. H. Gilliland on Illinois Missions, and Marion Stevenson will make an address and also conduct a conference on Bible school work. The C. W. B. M. will have an interesting session. A. I. Zeller, minister of the church at Farmer City, writes that entertainment will be furnished to all who notify him at once. The officers are: L. H. Otto, president; J. H. Smart, vice president; H. H. Peters, of Rossville, secretary.

—Christian church circles in this city were greatly shocked Monday, the 11th inst., to learn of the sudden death, by a street car accident, of Mrs. Mildred D. Reavis. Sister Reavis was the daughter of Peter Donan, one of our pioneer preachers, widely known through his intellectual ability and great achievements in the cause of primitive Christianity. Her body was buried beside her parents at Palmyra, Mo. She leaves two sons, Holland S., of Beaumont, Texas, and Donan, of Los Angeles, beside a multitude of friends, to mourn the untimely, tragic departure of this truly consecrated Christian mother and friend. Funeral services were conducted in this city by the Editor of this paper, who has been one of her trusted friends for many years.

—Perry J. Rice has preached his farewell sermon at South Bend, Ind. During a little over six years since he took up the work there more than $30,000 has been raised for all purposes, about $10,000 of that being for mission work outside, or within the city. Brother Rice's ministry has been abundantly successful and happy at South Bend. Speaking about the liberty given to him in the matter of teaching, he said: "I prize nothing that you have given me higher than this. If the ministry is to discharge its function, it must be free; a preacher must speak the things which he has seen and felt, which he has received; or his message will be as sounding brass or clanging cymbal. Twice during the past year I have declined calls to large churches, one of which offered me a larger salary than I shall get in Minneapolis, and in both instances I declined them because I feared that I could not have liberty; indeed, both churches asked me to declare myself doctrinally. I regard such interference with the preacher's message such curtailment of his liberty as a serious blunder on the part of the churches. Better far that he should present erroneous teaching than that he should be compelled to mouth over the convictions of others under the hypocritical pretense that they are his own convictions. But a preacher must be wise with such liberty, not abusing it and not running after every wind of doctrine that blows, and when he is wise he will usually be accorded the liberty that he deserves."

News from the Home Missionary Office.

Since May 1 we have received offerings from 1,170 churches. Of this number 431 gave more than last year. Thus far 333 have fallen below their record of last year. Perhaps your church is among them.

This year thus far 372 congregations, which sent no offering last year, have remembered the evangelization of America and have sent offerings. Think of the more than 8,000 congregations which have not taken the offering.

We have made some gains over last year. The Sunday-schools are $1,780.88 ahead of the record at this time a year ago. The offerings from churches for our regular fund is $823 short of those from the same source for the same period last year, but to these must be added $2,000, which we have received for the care of our preachers in California. Our total receipts are $2,065.85 in excess of those for the same portion of last year.

What do the appeals of 600 places which we are unable to help mean to you? A thousand more churches should send in generous offerings. Wm. J. Wright,
For the American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O.

The Twenty-fifth Anniversary of Drake University

From June 5 to June 14 the commencement exercises of Drake University have been in progress. These exercises have marked the first quater century of progress of this institution. The occasion is memorable on account of our distinguished visitors. Among these were D. R. Lucas and wife, of Indianapolis; Chancellor Craig and wife, of Denver; President B. O. Aylesworth, of Fort Collins, Col.; Rev. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City; Mrs. George D. Carpenger, of Chicago, and Hon. Theodore P. Shonts, of the Panama Canal commission. Dr. Lucas gave us a great address on Founders' day. Chancellor Craig was in his happiest mood while responding to a toast at the great banquet which closed the exercises. He was also a chief speaker on Wednesday evening in the anniversary program. President B. O. Aylesworth also took part in the anniversary program, giving a very happy resume of twenty-five years of Drake University history. His addresses are an admirable weaving together of poetry, philosophy and eloquence. At the banquet the chief speaker was Hon. Theodore P. Shonts, who spoke concerning the problems confronting the nation in the construction of the Panama canal. He also delivered the address on commencement day.

Baccalaureate Sunday was a high day. The procession from the college buildings to the University Place church was imposing. The sermon was delivered by Chaplain Charles S. Medbury, and certainly did credit, not only to the speaker, but to the great institution which was represented by its faculty and graduates. At the evening hour, Dr. D. R. Dungan delivered the annual address to the graduates and students of the college of the Bible. It was practical, helpful and orthodox. Those who know Dr. Dungan can better imagine the force and grasp of his theme than we can describe it in a few words. At the close of this Leslie Wolf, George Maxwell, Ralph Calloway and Alexander N. Simpson were ordained to the ministry.

On Monday afternoon Frank W. Richardson, of Kansas City, delivered the dedicatory address for the new Bible building, known as Memorial Hall. During the ten days no address was more appropriate to the occasion, or more highly appreciated than this.

The expense of the building, which cost nearly $30,000, has been covered, but more money is needed to pay for its furnishing. No call was made for pledges on this occasion, but a donation was announced from Dr. D. C. Bice and wife.

Wednesday afternoon and evening were devoted especially to the founders of the institution and the anniversary program. Our pioneer preacher, Allen Hickey, presented a carefully prepared historical sketch of our educational history in Iowa. He clearly demonstrated to all that just fifty years ago this June the first definite steps were taken to establish an educational institution; so that, while this is the twenty-fifth anniversary of Drake University, it is the fiftieth in our educational history. Dr. Bruce E. Shepperd gave an interesting history of the prime movers in the founding of Drake University.

At the evening hour Dr. B. O. Aylesworth spoke of "Drake University, Her Struggles and Triumphs." Dr. William Bayard Craig spoke upon "Drake University, Her Contribution to Church and State." Dr. H. O. Breeden had for his theme, "Drake University, Twenty-five Years of History." Probably the most interesting feature of the whole evening consisted of greetings from many other educational institutions.

The greatest day of all the ten was commencement day. From the various departments and colleges there were 215 graduates. Space forbids making a complete classification of these. From the College of the Bible three young men, Hiram L. Denton, William D. Endres and William S. Lockhart, took the B. D. degree. From the School of Christian Workers, Mrs. W. S. Lockhart received a diploma. Of the forty-two receiving degrees from the College of Liberal Arts eleven had also done extensive work in the College of the Bible. Five of these received honorable mention by reason of the large number of credits in the College of the Bible. Alexander N. Simpson was one of the five honor graduates in the College of Liberal Arts.

Upon President H. D. McAneney, of Berkeley, Cal., and Hon. Theodore P. Shonts were conferred the degree of Doctor of Laws.

The closing banquet at the Savoy Hotel was the crowning function of all these days. Two hundred guests were seated at the tables. Prof. Wilbert L. Carr, of the University of Chicago, was toastmaster. Aside from the toasts already mentioned, others were responded to by Miss Susie Keating Glaspell, of Davenport, Ia.; Hon. Cassius C. Dowell, of Des Moines; George A. Jewett, and President Hill M. Bell. Those who know, pronounced this occasion one of the most thrilling and brilliant in all the history of Drake University.

The four men who, for twenty-five years, have sat at the head of Drake University are Chancellor George T. Carpenter, deceased; President B. O. Aylesworth, Chancellor William Bayard Craig, and President Hill M. Bell. The last three participated in the anniversary exercises. It would have been difficult for an onlooker to determine who of these three men enjoyed the occasion most. Each vied with the others in giving credit for bringing the University to its present success. President Aylesworth took charge of the school, brought it successfully through financial distress some twelve or fourteen years ago, and largely increased its attendance. Chancellor Craig gave it a place in the hearts of Des Moines people, starting the building era, and still further enlarged its attendance. President Bell has completed the organization begun by Chancellor Craig, has proved himself the greatest of builders, and has brought the attendance up to nearly 1,700. During the administration of President Bell all of my efforts have been to secure a new building for the College of the Bible. I wish here to testify that without his constant advice and help this enterprise never could have been brought to a successful issue. It was to him that Governor Drake announced his intention of giving $10,000 toward this enterprise. He secured other pledges also. In all Iowa the Bible College and all for which it stands has no warmer friend than President Hill M. Bell.

Without the constant help of Dean Frederick Howard, of the Conservatory of Music, and his faithful assistants, this anniversary occasion would have lost more than half its charm. If I mistake not, every function depended upon him for music numbers.

Professor Walter Stairs, of the College of the Bible, has resigned his position and taken work in Texas Christian University at Waco, Texas. He has been with us for five years and we would have gladly retained him longer.

A word must be said concerning Prof. Charles O. Denny and the secretary, Mary A. Carpenter, of the committee on arrangements. To these should be given unmeasured praise for the perfect and splendid outcome of the whole ten days' program.

A. M. Haggard.

The Twentieth Annual Texas Convention

The twentieth annual convention of the Christian churches of Texas met with the Main Street Christian Church, Waxahachie, June 11-15. This congregation has been fortunate in the ministry of Chalmers McPherson for nearly twenty years. He was one of the originators of our state mission work and has been a member of the executive committee most of this time. This congregation has always been a loyal supporter of every aggressive movement among the Texas churches. It was therefore a matter of congratulation that we could be entertained by this historic church. All but the first evening session were held at the Chautauqua grounds, near the city, one of the best places for such a gathering in any of the states.

Our Texas women are noted for doing things and there was not a dull moment from start to finish of their excellent program. Additional interest was given to this year's convention by the presence of Miss Mattie Pounds, of Indianapolis, Ind., who delivered two inspiring addresses. She gave a needed emphasis to the work of the church among the young people. Her visit will surely stimulate Texas auxiliaries in seriously grappling with this problem before the church. Mrs. C. A. Chasteen, of Garland, Junior Superintendent, reported 63 societies with 1,118 members and 834 Junior builders taken. The amount raised for all purposes was $665.53. Temple enjoys the distinction of being the largest society, with 118 members, while Amarillo is a close second, with 103 members. Ladonia made the largest per cent of increase. Oak Cliff, Bonham, Hillsboro and Garland were close competitors for the state banner, with Garland the winner. Miss Mason, corresponding secretary, reported 86 auxiliaries, with 26 of these on the honor roll. The six auxiliaries contributing the largest amounts were: McKinney, $343.60; First, Ft. Worth, $300.72; East Dallas, $169.55; Sherman, $162.10; Bonham, $159.15; Dallas Central, $157.90. The financial showing was as follows: C. W. B. M. day, $403.09; Easter offering, $121.65; Special offerings, $1,405.69; Texas Bible Chair Fund, $2,067.49; interest on Bible chair loan, $540; gifts for Bible chair, $1,527.40; for Jasper T. Moses, $402.94; general fund offering, $3,556.26. Total receipts, $5,486.69.

The report of the Bible chair at Austin was most encouraging and its success has exceeded the most sanguine hopes of its warmest advocates. F. L. Jewett has proven to be the right man for this responsible position. As a small testimonial to his faithfulness Baby Jewett was made a life member by the convention.

The old officers were unanimously and enthusiastically re-elected. No state has more capable or conscientious officers than Mrs. Ida V. Jarvis and Miss Bertha Mason.

Miss Clara L. Case, one of our missionaries in Mexico, was a welcome visitor, and gave quite a pleasing account of the work being done in that country. Texas people are deeply interested in the Mexican mission, because of the proximity of the country and our common interests. Texas women are awake and growing.

The Texas Christian Missionary Convention was welcomed to Waxahachie by Judge M. B. Templeton, one of her most distinguished citizens. J. W. Holsapple, the president of the convention, responded in a few fitting words and then delivered an admirable convention address upon the timely topic of "Worship." J. A. Lord, editor of "The Christian Standard," gave us a great address on "Liberty in Service," which met with most hearty approval.

All day Wednesday was devoted exclusively to Texas missions. Two hours were given to Corresponding Secretary J. C. Mason and the men on the firing line. A summary for the year shows: Men, 34; days, 7,755; sermons, 3,825; baptisms, 910; by letters and reclaimed, 690; denominations, 220; net gain, 1,130. Total, 1,820. Cash by and for missionaries, $17,660; cash by our missionaries for all purposes, $30,932.31; pledges, $15,396. Total, $46,528.31. These reports were followed by an able, heart-searching address by M. M. Davis, on "The Self-Propelling Power of the Gospel."

In the afternoon there was a symposium on "The Needs of Texas." W. O. Stephens responded for east Texas, E. J. Bradley for southeastern Texas, R. L. Courtney for southwestern Texas and A. C. Parker for the Panhandle country. Each speaker opened our eyes to golden opportunities and made us feel that theirs was the most needy field.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, A. E. Ewell, Bonham; first vice president, R. C. Horn, Vineland; second vice president, J. F. Anderson, North Waco; secretaries, Graham McMurray and W. F. Reynolds; treasurer, J. C. Mason, Dallas.

The board of managers elected J. C. Mason for corresponding secretary. The announcement of this action to the convention was received with uproarious applause and the giving of the Chautauqua salute to our veteran secretary.

Judge Anson Rainey, of Dallas, chief justice of the civil court of appeals, and chairman of the board of managers of the "T. C. M. C.," delivered the annual Texas missionary address. It was a strong presentation of the imperative duty of Texas disciples. Colby D. Hall, the secretary of education for our Texas churches, followed with a thoughtful address on "The Second Chapter of Church History." Brother Mason made a brief statement of the plans of the board for a great summer evangelistic crusade and the need of $1,500 to prosecute it, and over $1,200 was pledged in a few minutes. Several strong men have been secured for this campaign. Altogether it was the greatest day in the history of Texas missions.

Thursday witnessed some great speeches by the representatives of our affiliated interests. Foreign missions was worthily represented by Stephen J. Corey. Some of us missed the wit and humor of Rains, and the consuming zeal of McLean, but all were delighted with Corey. Kansas has won undying fame among plain Christians by producing two such apostles of church extension as Rains and C. A. Finch, of Topeka. He won a warm place in our hearts and will always be welcome when Muckley can not come. George B. Ranshaw fairly surpassed himself in his great plea for home missions. Texans claim Ranshaw and always give him the glad hand when he comes home. W. P. Jennings spoke on "Christian Literature," and made a strong plea for our papers, books, etc. Judge W. K. Homan spoke most eloquently on "Temperance." G. H. Morrison reported for our "Christian Endeavor Societies." H. R. Ford for our "Bible Schools." T. E. Shirley for "T. C. U.," and our affiliated schools. A. A. Everts, of Dallas, spoke on "What is the Lord's Part?" G. Lyle Smith delivered the "Memorial Address." This was a most touching and tender service. In the evening the gifted and eloquent L. D. Anderson, of Palestine, gave a very fine address on "The Victory of Faith." This was followed by a reception to the delegates and visitors at the Sims Public Library.

G. L. BUSH.

Convention Notes.

The big-hearted McPherson was an ideal host.

Most of the delegates had a convention conscience.

Collin county is the best organized county in the state.

A. E. Ewell, of Bonham, was elected president for next year.

Mrs. Pittman, of Dallas, sang two beautiful solos, which she had composed.

Brother Mason said every section of the state considers itself the neglected portion.

Texans are proud of C. W. B. M. ladies; several could grace a national gathering with credit.

The 600,000 negroes within the borders of the state are in urgent need. What will our brotherhood do?

The Christian Publishing Company was the only one of our Houses represented. It was generously patronized.

The business men accepted their special invitation and attended in gratifying numbers. Some came hundreds of miles.

It seems strange not to see the familiar faces of McLean, Rains, Smith or Muckley, but the various interests were ably represented.

The large number and high Christian character of the preachers who have come into the state during the past year was encouraging.

Dr. Clinton Lockhart, recently elected dean of the Bible college, and acting president of Texas Christian University, was cordially and enthusiastically received.

J. A. Lord's address on "Liberty" was a splendid effort. The next day Brother Mason remarked, "If Brother Lord would just talk like that in 'The Christian Standard' we would all read it."

Dr. H. G. Flemming, formerly dean of the Bible department of the loyal brethren's college at Denton, but dismissed on account of his pacific speech at the lectureship last fall, was introduced and given an ovation.

L. D. Anderson, of Palestine, who two years ago delivered a great address before the state convention, was uanimously honored by being invited to deliver another night address, and the people want him again next year.

Not every singer possesses the soul power of Mrs. Edith Steinbrook, recently from Iowa. The first evening she sang, instead of the usual applause a hearty chorus of amens passed through the hall, for her song was an inspiring prayer.

The Chautauqua grounds proved a delightful place for the gathering and the hospitality of Waxahachie's homes is unsurpassed. The Ladies' Aid Societies of the various Waxahachie churches vied with one another on their alternate days for serving dinner and supper on the grounds.

A. L. CLINKENBEARD.

Illinois Notes.

How delightful is that noble and rare grace of hospitality. It costs something; it's troublesome; it means more work. But to the exile from home it is an oasis, restful, refreshing, reassuring of the mutual helpfulness in the blessed and happy family of our common Father; strangers, yet of the household of faith. Many homes and churches I shall never forget, because of this holy welcome and joyful sharing in homes of the household of faith.

Bro. W. D. Baker is concluding his first year's work at Cameron. The church is in fine condition. The Sunday-school, under the management of W. C. Whitman for some eight years, is one of the best organized and best working schools in the state. C. W. B. M., the two Endeavor Societies and Ladies' Aid are full of life and usefulness. The Endeavorers have a splendid missionary library and support an orphan in India. We hope that Brother Baker and the church may have many long years of usefulness together.——The church at Gerlaw which enjoyed long and fruitful ministries of A. M. Hale and L. F. Davis is now without a regular preacher. The house is being repaired and soon all will be ready for forward, aggressive work. This was the home of R. D. McCoy, now a missionary with F. E. Hagin in Tokio, Japan. Bro. Frank Flagg, who teaches in Gerlaw, also preaches for the church occasionally. He is a capable young man and should devote himself entirely to the ministry.——The little church at Alexis is preparing for a meeting in June by Buchannon and Gardner. If the church will devote itself to the Lord's work a bright future is before it. Brother Zerby visits them every two weeks.——Knoxville has one of the most beautiful houses for the cost in the state. J. T. Stivers was minister during its erection. The church was organized by Bro. J. H. Garrison, February 27, 1871, with thirteen members. Guess there is not much in the saying "the unlucky 13," for both the church and its organizer have moved forward with grateful prosperity. Two of the charter members are living. The present membership is about 170, with a splendid Sunday-school. The church has enjoyed the regular ministry of such men as J. H. Garrison, S. K. Hallam, J. B. Royal, Oliver W. Stewart, G. L. Snively, L. B. Myers and others, with Albert Schwartz the present pastor. In his eighteen months' service he has welcomed about seventy-five to the fellowship of the church. The church has sent out as preachers H. J. Reynolds, of Camp Point, Ray Lessig and F. C. Buck.——At London Mills L. G. Parker preaches half time. The Sunday-school and various departments prosper. They have a good house, with recent improvements; a fine field for splendid work.——R. L. Beshers has resigned at El Paso, but doubtless will soon be at work in a new field, as he is a valuable man. The church is in good order and has enjoyed uniform prosperity since I preached for it when a student; hope a good man will soon be settled at El Paso.——Fairbury has a good house and a good membership, but has suffered seriously by removals of some of its leading families. The gap ought not long remain broken, for there are plenty left to do splendid service for the Master if they will work faithfully. L. B. Pickerill preaches for them half time and could devote the other half to some other church in reach. Address him at DeLand, Ill.——The young church at Forrest is growing under the part time ministry of J. D. Reynolds, who lives at Saunemin, and also preaches for that church. Both places have good, new houses, with debts provided for, and the work prospers. Brother Reynolds is a Virginian, educated at Hiram, and an Illinoisan by adoption. He seems to assimilate to the new surroundings and to the enterprises of his adopted state with unusual readiness. Often when a preacher changes states the church to which he comes looses a year, and often more, in its co-operation in state missions and Christian education. Brother Reynolds is a happy exception. Saunemin has one of the best C. W. B. M.'s in the state, considering the size. It is the home of Miss Mary Monehan, for some time teacher in S. C. I. at Edwards, Miss., and is now secretary of the Fourth district in Illinois. Forrest was the home of Brother Hoyt, a liberal contributor to all our public enterprises, whose widow, lonely and frail, still takes deep interest in the growth of the kingdom of God.——Colfax is laying plans for a $10,000 brick church, which is greatly needed and which the church can build with but small sacrifice, if every one will do his part. N. H. Robertson is leading the forces and feeding the people with the bread of life. A bright day is before the church if it is faithful to the King.——Paxton has one of our old congregations which has had a varied life, but always doing business. M. L. Pontius is the present minister upon whose preaching perhaps there is the largest attendance the church has ever enjoyed. Additions are frequent.——The Saybrook Church numbers 150 members, with 100 or more enrolled in the Sunday-school, an Endeavor of thirty and an auxiliary of seventeen to the C. W. B. M. The church is comparatively new. This was the childhood home of L. H. Stine, now minister of Tipton, Ind. His father and brothers still live here. L. P. Fisher, a promising young minister, was trained by this congregation, as have been several preacher's wives. It is a great church and produces great men. Bro. J. N. Thomas, the minister, is one of our most consecrated men.——Arrowsmith is still in debt for its splendid new house, but arrangements are ample for the balance. C. A. Lockhart has been their minister for nearly two years, and is an excellent speaker. The church numbers 200 members, a Sunday-school of sixty-five, Junior Christian Endeavor of thirty-five and Christian Endeavor of twenty-five. This is a great field for aggressive work.——Eureka College has just closed its fifty-first session; one of the best in its history.—J. G. Waggoner, Eureka, Illinois.

Colorado

I have been here at Craig, Colo., fifteen months. Craig is situated on the Bear River, in the heart of the great Routt county coal fields, and is also surrounded by fine farming country. The scenery, climate and water are unsurpassed—the healthiest place I have ever lived. The resources are so great as to be most past belief, but have not been developed for lack of a railroad; but the new Moffitt railroad now being built will be here within a year, and then we will have great prosperity, for the hills are full of all kinds of valuable mineral besides the coal. Routt county is 150 miles long and 100 broad. Yampa, Steamboat Springs, Hayden, Craig and Maybell are the principal towns. The Craig Christian Church is the only body of Disciples in this great county. We have a $2,500 building and an excellent membership, numbering eighty. Our Ladies' Mite Society is notorious for its work, and the sweetness of spirit with which the work is done. We have no church debt. Our men are the most regular in church attendance and support of the work of any I know.

I have been preaching on Snake River, in Wyoming, one-fourth of my time, for eleven months; at Slater on Tuesday night, Savoy Wednesday, Dixon Thursday and Boggs Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights and Sunday morning. There was no regular work of our people here on Snake River when I began the work, but there were a few members at Boggs. We have had nine additions at Boggs and five at Savoy and seven at Craig. In all I have preached 201 sermons in the past fifteen months. I leave for school in August. Snake River has almost enough pledged already for a pastor's salary for full time the coming year. So we will need two good men in August, one for Craig and one for Snake River. The salaries will be about $800. If you know of the right men put us in touch with them at once. The fields are ripe and the people anxious for our message. Men who are good and will hustle can do much for Christ here.—W. L. Cline.

Western Pennsylvania.

P. P. Hasselvander has accepted a call from the Ridgway and Johnsonburg congregations each for half time. These are both new points lately started by J. A. Joyce, evangelist for the American Christian Missionary Society for Western Pennsylvania under the special T. W. Phillips fund. Brother Hasselvander began his work June 10.——Wallace Tharp, minister of the First Church, Allegheny, gave the address at the first anniversary of the Ridgway congregation in the court house, and a crowded house heard him with much pleasure and a great benefit to the new work in this important field.——Walter S. Rounds, minister at Crafton and secretary of the Western Pennsylvania Christian Ministerial Association, has been undergoing a siege of typhoid fever, but is convalescing, and hopes to be ready for work again soon.——F. M. Pittman has taken up the work at Dravosburg, Pa.——W. H. Oldham has gone from Ebensburg to East Liverpool, Ohio, and A. T. Welty, who graduates at Bethany this month, takes the work at Ebensburg.——The convention of W. P. C. M. S. at Connellsville decided to recommend by resolution these points for special emphasis as part of the centennial enlargement: 1. Every one win one. 2. Every member in the Bible school and as many more. 3. At least one-tenth of our income for the Lord's work. Many of the churches are considering these movements and adopting them.——Natrona Church, W. H. Wersheit, minister, is in a meeting with home forces.——F. F. Schultz, after a very successful ministry at Ellwood City, has resigned.—J. A. Joyce, Cor. Sec.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. ### Effingham County, Ill.

The churches of Effingham county have effected an organization for co-operative work along the lines of evangelization and the selection of ministers. A two-days' county meeting will be held with the church at Elliottstown on the last Saturday and Sunday in July.——The church at Effingham has employed Bro. Wilford Field for the remainder of the year. His work starts well. There were three accessions June 3—two by letter and one by obedience and four confessions June 10 and two by statement.——The writer delivered the memorial sermon at Mason and spoke also in the evening. The church at Mason is alive and doing things. Prof. Diets is the efficient superintendent and Brother Hopper, of Cowden, their minister.——E. B. Schooley, one of the elders in the Effingham Church and county superintendent of union Sunday-school work, was on the program at the Kankakee convention and was also made a member of the committee on home department work.—D. B. Bebout.

Empire State Items.

The New York state convention is to be held at Elmira, June 26-29. We hope for the largest and most inspiring meeting ever held in the state. Bro. L. C. McPherson, just returned on furlough from Havana, Cuba, is to be present; also Sister Mary Graybiel, from India. All of the national missionary boards will be represented on the program. We are always glad to welcome our national secretaries, for we believe in an all-round missionary education of the people, and we do not consider it detrimental that our offerings for the foreign, home and church extension interests exceed our offerings for state work three or four fold. But we ourselves are just coming to realize what an immense field is before us right here in more than 100 populous cities and towns that have no congregation of our people. One city of 58,000 has increased 84 per cent in five years, and another of 61,000 has increased 28 per cent in the same time. We have no church in either. In one of these is a new residence section more than one mile square, and containing from 5,000 to 10,000 people, without a church of any kind except one mission on its border. This field ought to be entered at once, but we lack the funds necessary to do it. Our 10,000 members in the state are assisting at ten mission points, three of which expect to become self-supporting this year. But there are five open doors to every one that we can enter. The year now closing will be unique in that two-thirds of all of our active churches have held evangelistic meetings, with an ingathering of 800 in the thirty meetings. New York City alone has increased her membership more than 20 per cent. Who can say that the East is not responsive? Bro. D. C. Tremaine has done excellent work as state evangelist.

Brethren of the state, let us have a large convention so as to plan for a larger work. We meet in the new building in Elmira, where Bro. C. C. Crawford has labored so faithfully for nine years. He needs our encouragement. Railroad rate will be fare and one-third for the round-trip on the certificate plan. Be sure to ask for certificate when you buy ticket.—Eli H. Long, President State Board.

Los Angeles Letter.

Last fall and winter our cause in Los Angeles was written up again and again; it is not my purpose to write it once more and tell you exactly how it is. But things have happened since last winter in this Chicago of the Pacific coast. Everybody and everything have contributed to the growth of this marvelous city. San Francisco's disaster may be the largest contributor of them all. No wonder we are doing things; the only wonder is that more is not done. Instead of having twelve or fifteen places of worship here there ought to be twice or thrice as many. Now is the time! Since last winter Boyle Heights and Budlong Mission and South Main Street organized and built. On June 10 what has been known as the East Eighth Street Church laid the corner stone of a new building, while their old property, we understand, has been purchased by Brother Coulter, and may be used by one of our colored congregations.——Moreover great things are planning for a "Simultaneous revival," April and May, 1907. All these churches and missions are to be sound from the core out, if C. C. Chapman, B. F. Coulter, W. J. A. Smith, A. C. Smither, D. A. Wagner, J. F. Stewart, F. M. Kirkham, J. N. Smith, Geo. W. Pearl, J. C. Hall, J. P. McKnight, J. J. Myers, Willis S. Myers, L. Swindle, W. L. Martin, J. C. Dickson, J. I. West, M. J. Ferguson, Carl Green, Bro. Misner, S. B. Letson, W. T. Kendrick, F. G. Tyrrell, C. C. Bently, and some others whose names now escape me—I say the work in Los Angeles will be kept true to the old Gospel if these men can have their way about it, and we think they can. What an array of names! And we are told that S. M. Martin is coming to make this city his headquarters. In addition to the foregoing, there are two colored preachers, one of them, E. F. Henderson, being well known in Missouri. A work among the Japanese is carried on also.—E. H. Kellar.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

A large number of your readers sent me recipes for removing stains from my dress. I thank them all. In answer to inquiries regarding the fruit business, I would say, I made $121. last week, sold directions to 121 families; people pay $1. for directions quickly. I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh and costs almost nothing. I feel it my duty to give my experience, as anyone who will try, should make one or two hundred dollars in a few days right round home. I will mail a bottle of fruit and complete directions to you, for 21 two cent stamps, which is only the cost of bottle, fruit, mailing case, postage, etc. Address Francis Casey, No. 53 E. 125th St., Block 181, New York, N. Y. With a bottle of fruit for people to see and taste, you should sell hundreds of directions.

Commencements.

Campbell-Hagerman.

The closing exercises of the Campbell-Hagerman College for young women, Lexington, Ky., covered the week from May 24 to 30, inclusive. A charming cantata, rendered by the pupils of the preparatory class in Duff chapel of the college plant, introduced the week's program of entertainments, and was followed on Friday and Saturday evening by recitals, given by the pupils of the schools of music and oratory. The baccalaureate services were held in the Central Christian Church, in the presence of an immense audience. The musical program throughout was of a high order, several numbers being rendered in an effective manner by the voice pupils of the college. M. M. Davis, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Dallas, Tex., preached the sermon. To those who have heard Mr. Davis, it is needless to say that the sermon was characterized by range, practical pertinency of the thought and by that subtle, spiritual quality which breathes throughout all of his public utterances. The splendid work done by the large class in art was on exhibition in Duff chapel during Monday and Tuesday and evoked words of warmest praise from the many lovers of the beautiful who were fortunate enough to see the extensive display.

On Monday evening the annual recital of the pupils of the school of music gave evidence of thorough and successful work on the part of both teachers and pupils. The college takes great pride in the success of this department, over 100 pupils having taken work in it during the session just closed. The class day exercises occurred on Tuesday and proved to be wonderfully brilliant and interesting, radiant with the charm of youthful humor and fragrant with the sweetness and joy of innocent, maidenly hearts. The commencement exercises were held on Thursday in the opera house, which was filled. When the curtain rose it revealed twenty-eight lovely young women, radiant with joy, and robed in white, arranged in a crescent on the ample stage. The address was delivered by Peter Ainslee, pastor of the Calhoun Street Church, Baltimore, Md. His theme was "Crowns," and it was handled in a charmingly forceful style, evincing a wide range of learning in the fields of science and literature, great familiarity with the history of royalty and a just conception and happy interpretation of its great events, as he marshalled the crowned heads of the past and the present in panoramic procession before the vision, and the true poet's inspiration when he drew from it all, for the young women before him, for whom his address had been especially prepared, the pertinent and important lesson that "kind hearts are more than coronets," and that the crown of loving service to our fellowmen, though it must ever be a crown of thorns, is the crown of crowns, the one crown of true, unsullied worth, whose beauty and brightness shall never fade away.

At the conclusion of this splendid address President Hagerman, after a few last words, rich with vital thought, and aglow with deepest feeling, given in his own forceful, impressive way, presented medals to a number of pupils of different grades for highest excellence in various departments of the college life and work, announced the honor pupils in the senior class, two of its members (Miss Roberta Farra and Miss Louise O'Neill) sharing the highest honor, and closed the interesting program and the year's work by presenting their diplomas to the twenty-eight members of the class.

During the session just closed about 250 students were enrolled, over 100 of these being boarders, and coming from all sections of our country. President Hagerman has certainly accomplished a great work, and it is the earnest wish of the writer, and a host of other friends, that he may live long to carry forward the magnificent enterprise so auspiciously begun. ### NARROWNESS REBUKED.—Luke 9:49-56

"Think gently of the erring one;
Oh, let us ne'er forget,
However darkly stained by sin,
He is our brother yet.

"Forget not, brother, thou hast sinned,
And sinful yet may be;
Deal gently with the erring one,
As God hath dealt with thee."

Fewer of those standing in the temple and thanking God they are not as other men will go down to their homes justified than of those smiting their breasts, after having looked narrowly into their own lives, and saying, God be merciful unto me a sinner.

Theologians may continue to judge men by the letter of the law, and determine their rights to heaven by the term of a Greek lexicon and a Hebrew grammar, but the people generally judge us rather by the fruits of the Spirit abounding in our lives, and in this we believe vox populi est vox Dei.

We will have a truer conception of heathenism, if we view it not so much as enmity against God as the blind, pitiful gropings of those pagans after God. Similarly with the great religious bodies with which we are surrounded. Each of the existing denominations is evidence of determined efforts earnest men have made to break away from Catholicism and get back nearer to the divine model of the church of Christ. This broader, truer view of existing institutions will bring us into far more helpful relations with them—enabling us to overcome them in love.

"Lord wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them?" The question will recur, to what extent was Jewish antipathy and ready recrimination against Samaritans, as manifested in this imprecation, responsible for the inhospitableness accorded the apostolic band? Is the church wholly guiltless of the criminal prejudice against it by the world? And are we Disciples of Christ innocent in the matter of the illwill existing in many places between us as a people and the great religious denominations surrounding us? Let us be careful lest our views of them and their relations to God be even narrower than we suppose their conception of church and Bible to be.

Note the narrowness compacted into this chapter that the great Teacher reproved within a very brief period. He would permit any one having the power to cast out demons; nor would he consume those with fire who having not learned of him would not receive him. Neither would he let go unreproved the narrow impulses of one who thought to follow him into a throne room, but whose faith the Savior knew was insufficient to follow him through homelessness, friendlessness and persecution; nor that calculating allegiance that suggested to another to propose following Jesus when domestic affairs were all satisfactorily disposed of. It will be well for us to make such application of these incidents as will spare us from personal humiliation.

Doubtless the messenger who went before to prepare entertainment for Jesus held up to fine scorn that narrowness of the Samaritans that refused hospitality to their Master, "because his face was as though he would go to Jerusalem." Yet they were themselves such abject slaves to prejudice that just prior to this even John expressed desire that men should suffer all the tortures of demoniacal possession rather than be relieved by one who "followeth not with us." Here it was needed that the apostles should first pluck the beams out of their own eyes in order to see clearly to cast the motes out of their brothers' eyes.

While pride may exalt us higher than Haman's gallows, it will bring us to a fall as fatal. Humility may render us diffident as Moses, but combined with consecration it may enable us to lead others out of the deserts of sin and within sight of the heavenly Canaan, and to write our names in the Lamb's book of life.

Humility is one of the most beautiful words in our vocabulary and its associates are of the true nobility of the language. You will find it in the company of "meek," "modest," "unassuming," "unobtrusive," "unpretentious" and others of like character. An unbridged social charm separates it from "arrogant," "boastful," "haughty," "pretentious," "proud" and similar repellants.

There is little hope of saving one of a haughty spirit. Only in the spirit of humility can we see our imperfections and sins and need of a Savior. To enter into this spirit we must not compare ourselves with other erring mortals, but rather stand in the white light raying forth from Jesus, and gradually, at least, the great contrast between us, and its significance will dawn upon us.

Refusing to sing a spiritual song, to interpret a Scripture, or lead in prayer in an Endeavor meeting is not always proof of humility. Sometimes it is the manifestation of a pride that seals our lips, not because we could not do good by speaking, but because we fear we can not excel or come up to expectations we or others have created respecting our abilities. Pride ever lurks in the shadow of humility even while washing disciples' feet.

Humility does not necessarily disappear as one's position becomes more exalted. Kings have lived more humbly through long and splendid reigns than have some village poundmasters through their brief periods of authority. Pride springs from the consciousness that we are on a higher level than some others; humility results from a state of mind conscious of that, but also of our being on a lower level, and doing less than we ought considering our opportunities. Haughtiness is self-glorying that we have done so much; humility is a forgetting of things done in the past and a pressing forward toward achievements worthier a good cause with which we may be identified.

Pride impelled the mother of Zebedee's children into a public audience with Jesus to seek family honors without preparation or apparent thought of rendering any equivalent for them. Her confusion only faintly typifies that which will overwhelm those whose vanity has in their thoughts and plans already placed beneath their feet the golden paved streets of the heavenly city for which they have made no adequate preparation. Before the nations they will be told, "Depart, for I never knew you."

Humility is not at all inconsistent with an ambition to do a great and good work. Lincoln walked in humility from an obscure hut in Kentucky, through the forests of Indiana, and struggles with poverty in Illinois on to the presidency because he was possessed of no unhallowed desires to merely write his name on that immortal roster containing the names of Washington and Jefferson, but to qualify himself for striking shackles from millions of slaves and help preserve an imperiled country. He became the greatest of all because in humility he served most and best.

JESUS AND THE CHILDREN.—
Matt. 18:1-14.

Memory verses, 2, 3.

GOLDEN TEXT.—It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish.—Matt. 18:14.

At the most solemn moments, when the most spiritual thoughts might have been supposed to be uppermost in their minds, the apostles often lapsed into small bickerings about their respective shares in the honors and rewards which their Master would distribute when he came into his kingdom. They were very human. Not long after the transfiguration, when the prospective glory of the new kingdom was still rather vividly before them, there arose a controversy about greatness. Who shall be greatest in the kingdom?

Jesus answered the question with an illustrated discourse on humility. His object lesson was a child. You ask about greatness in the kingdom, he said, but first consider whether you will enter the kingdom at all. He who is unduly eager for greatness, or feverishly interested in outranking his brethren, will have no place at all in the kingdom. He will be neither great nor small in it, for he will be on the outside. One must put on the humility, the teachableness, the unselfconsciousness of a little child in order to be eligible for entrance to the kingdom, and he who succeeds most largely in developing these qualities of character will be greatest in the kingdom.

If any other conditions of pre-eminence in the kingdom had been named, it would have been possible to have fulfilled them in the very spirit which Jesus was aiming to rebuke. If he had named righteousness (that is, obedience to law), or temperance, or good works, or zeal in preaching the Gospel—any of these could have been done in the spirit of selfish competition to get ahead of others in the struggle for greatness. But humility as the condition of greatness means that one can not become really great until he has ceased to think or care about greatness in any selfish sense. The man who thinks of his work and of the service he can render, who thinks of his own faults with a view to mending them and of the superiority of others with a view to learning from them, becomes great in spite of himself. He who attempts to stretch himself into greatness by self-assertion, self-sufficiency and selfish competition, dwindles into the most pitiful pigmy.

The parallel passage in Mark (9:33-50) inserts at this point the beautiful incident about the man who "followed not us," and yet was casting out demons in the name of Christ. "Forbid him not," said Jesus. He who does the works of God is of God. God uses many imperfect instruments. But when we find a man or a church which God uses and whose work God blesses, we need not be afraid of contamination from such.

The virtues of humility and docility lend themselves readily to abuse by unworthy leaders and teachers. One who is docile may the more easily be led astray. One who is teachable may the more readily be taught wrong. Hence the warning against causing the little ones to stumble. It applies both to the children, literally, and to those who become as little children. It does not mean, as it is sometimes taken to mean, that one must avoid doing anything that would offend one weak in faith. Those who attempt to block the progress of Christendom by posing as little ones who are being made to stumble often lack the very qualities of humility and docility which Jesus was trying to inculcate.

Note the remarkable parallel between Matt. 18:8, 9 and Matt. 5:29, 30, the offending eye and hand. Also between Matt. 18:12, 13 and Luke 15:4-7, the lost sheep and the ninety and nine. Luke places the latter parable in quite a different connection and at a much later period.

The ascetic doctrine of mortifying the body for the benefit of the soul, has found some support in these verses about the eye and hand. But the fault has been in assuming that bodily perfections are a hindrance to the soul. The "if" in the verse is important. If thy hand is an enemy of the spirit's welfare, it is better to cut it off. This is only a forcible way of saying that nothing should be allowed to stand in the way of the soul's health. But eye and hand ought to be so conquered as to be helps, not hindrances to the soul. There is still room for the truth that lies in the words of Browning's Rabbi Ben Ezra:

> "As the bird wings and sings,
> Let us cry, 'All good things
> Are ours, nor soul helps flesh now more than > flesh helps soul.' "

"A Brotherhood of St. John Proposed."

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Has not the time arrived when the ministers of the Christian Church should seek to be more brotherly and federate more closely in sympathy with each other? Is it not true that we look upon many of our fellow preachers as strangers and aliens, and is not our treatment by and of them about as discourteous as we would expect from those of less sacred and related work? Is it not true that as young preachers we found the spirit of other ministers and churches much different from what we had expected? We who fled to the love of the sanctuary and to the brotherhood of ministers for loving association to escape the battle of courts and the hatred of councils, find, alas, the churches often too cold, and the brotherhood of ministers occupied with cares of the profession rather than being engaged in the tender graces of love.

How often we hear a preacher brother criticised, assailed, called in question, his character often slandered and his work maligned. This influence can but be harmful. It filters through the whole church and affects the spirit of the humblest saints. How many at our great conventions have felt actually lonely and lost, hundreds of preachers present, many filled with the idea of greatness and this greatness to be manifested by public deliverance. Many younger ones have read of our great men and how disappointed have they felt when they found them actually too busy with being great to be approached, and if one did not dare to seek an introduction—well he was not received in the Master's spirit. Is not the prevalent idea of greatness wrong? How would Christ act at a great convention—stand around like a stone of God? or sit in secret at some hotel until time to be ushered in the back way to make a great speech? It is true many are social and mean well, but does not this always manifest itself in cliques and circles? Does not each college form a clique and ever and anon din the convention atmosphere with calls to its own to meetings, feasts and banquets? Woe unto the man who was educated at normal school or state university. He may have the learning of Erasmus, but, alas, if not from some of their own he is to go off to himself and commune, or say mizpah. It is a serious question if our schools do not tend to narrowness. Come, let us have something broader. Let us have "A brotherhood of St. John," or something similar organized at the Buffalo convention among our preachers and other leaders. Let us freely discuss it between now and then as to membership, constitution, purpose, aims, motto, etc.

1. Let it be entered by all preachers and workers in good standing.
2. No difference where educated.
3. Terms of membership—as cheap as possible.
4. Organization—to be simple.
5. Time of meeting—National convention.
6. Have national and state organizations.
7. Purpose—To break up cliques; to cultivate universal love; to intensify our regard for each other; to broaden our views coextensive with the universe; to instill the university spirit and the spirit of the Master into each other, our churches, our conventions, our colleges.

I would like to see this discussed through our papers, or to have something else discussed to meet our present needs.

Pastor Christian Church, Tuscola, Ill.

The Logic of Denominationalism.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

The logic of denominationalism forbids federation, for that logic can be nothing but independent action. As I heard a Jew once say: "We must build upon our glorious Judaism;" so, on many occasions we have heard preachers of the denominations use similar expressions. But it seems now that representative denominations are thinking of surrendering their logic and federating. Shall the Disciples of Christ be the most denominational of the denominations? Shall we preserve inviolate the iron-clad logic of denominationalism after preaching the opposite for almost a century?

We are not asked to give up a single conviction based on God's truth, but only to unite on things concerning which we hold common views. What more could any one ask? Why put up a straw man in order to knock him down with wind? This question of union is a practical question and not merely a theological one. The door to practical success seems now opening. Shall we enter or remain in our closets theorizing? Misunderstanding would lessen and genuine brotherhood would develop by contact. The Chinese wall of prejudice built around the denominations against us would gradually crumble away. And since truth is invincible if it can only be heard, the whole truth would finally prevail. We need not fear that truth will be tarnished. It will remain one vital and eternal. It has the divine stamp on it and is incapable of human destruction.

The only end should be to build up the one kingdom of Christ. And we are not the only one in that kingdom. Christ recognized no distinction in the unity of truth nor in the unity of its products. Let us still hold to that inspiring universal idea of the Christ. May we be actuated and inspired only by God-thoughts, God-feelings of charity and brotherly love, God-motives and ambitions. May we subordinate our own church ends to the ends of the kingdom of Christ and not be an end in ourselves.

The world is driving on in its efforts to centralize. Institutionally it is becoming fewer in number but greater in the extension of its institutions. Centralization is coming to be written upon every branch of industry. Then international relations are growing and even a parliament of man is talked of. The world is being bound up in a unit materially. Shall the church lead the world or be led by it?

Newman, Ill. O. L. Lyon.

[Nothing can be truer than that, in so far as the various denominations accept the idea of co-operation for the good of the common cause, they subordinate denominational interests to the wider interests of the kingdom of God; and that in so far as they oppose such co-operation they put their denominationalism above the common faith and the common good.—Editor.]

My Old Kentucky Home.

The sun shines bright in the old Kentucky home,
'Tis summer, the darkies are gay;
The corn tops ripe, and the meadows in the bloom,
While the birds make music all the day.
The young folks roll on the little cabin floor,
All merry, all happy and bright;
By'n by hard times comes a-knockin at the door,
Then, my old Kentucky home, good night.

They hunt no more for the 'possum and the coon
On the meadow, the hill and the shore;
They sing no more by the glimmer of the moon
On the beach by the old cabin door.
The days go by, like a shadow o'er the heart,
With sorrow where all was delight;
The time has come when the darkies have to part,
Then, my old Kentucky home, good night.

The head must bow and the back must bend,
Wherever the darky may go;
A few more days and the trouble all will end
In the field where the sugar-cane grow.
A few more days for to tote the weary load,
No matter, 'twill never be light;
A few more days we will totter on the road,
Then, my old Kentucky home, good night.

CHORUS:

Weep no more, my lady, oh! weep no more to-day;
We will sing one song for the old Kentucky home,
For the old Kentucky home, far away.

Kentucky "Home Coming" week was observed with great eclat at Louisville, Ky., last week, and the occasion brought back to the Bluegrass State thousands of its native sons and daughters who had scattered to the many quarters of the country. Not the least interesting of the exercises were those given over to the memory of Stephen C. Foster, whose simple words printed above and set to music have made Kentucky's name a household word throughout the world. It is doubtful it any composer ever received a more flattering tribute than that accorded to Foster on Thursday last, when one thousand of the school children of Louisville, who, by their contributions, have made possible a monument of bronze which is to stand in the new capitol at Frankfort, sang his beautiful music in chorus and cheered every mention of his name.

The exercises took place at the armory and, after addresses by Jerry South, of Arkansas, and R. W. Miller, of Richmond, Ky., the model of the Foster statue was unveiled by Mrs. Marion Foster Welsh, of Allegheny, Pa., daughter of Mr. Foster. Standing by the side of Mrs. Welsh as the drapery fell away, revealing the statue, were Mrs. Jesse Welsh Rose, granddaughter of the composer, and his two great-grandchildren, Dorothy Jeane Rose and Stephen Collins Foster Rose. The chorus of children, accompanied by an orchestra, then sang in a manner that evoked enthusiastic applause, "My Old Kentucky Home," "Old Folks at Home," "Old Black Joe" and other of Foster's melodies. The rendition of a few of Foster's melodies on the flute which he used during his lifetime brought the exercises to a close.

CHAPTER X.

PART II.

It was a late hour when Nelsie Loraine and her governess put on their wraps to leave Raymund's party. The farmhands, Tom and Fred, now free from the working of the ropes, which had kept them most of the time behind the scenes, came forward to receive farewells and congratulations. They looked unusually big, and breathed unusually hard in their embarrassment. Tom's naturally red face was a shade redder, and Fred, who often worked his ears back and forth for Baby's amusements, now did it unconsciously in his nervous state. Raymund, conscious that his big friends were not appearing to their best advantage, said: "Here are the two, Mrs. De Fer, that made my party so successful. For they took their own money without my knowing a thing about it, and bought all that candy, and the nuts and cakes, and made the lemonade, and worked so hard to keep us in our dining-room-in-the-air."

The mention of the dining-room-in-the-air was a mistake on Raymund's part. The farmhands immediately saw, as in a picture frame, the four dangling chairs-in-the-air, and the smashed table beneath, and Nelsie Loraine's hand poised vainly reaching for the green and yellow candy. Tom, remembering the girl's amazed face, tried not to laugh. He pressed his lips together, and his cheeks puffed out with suppressed air, and his eyes strained in their sockets. In his agitation he nudged Fred, who at once burst into shrill laughter. Then Tom exploded with a gigantic "Haw! haw! haw!" and leaned against the wall for support. So all laughed, and when the ladies went out into the path, escorted by Raymund and Jack, everybody was glowing with high spirits.

It was so evident that Raymund wanted to say something privately to Nelsie Loraine, and was so afraid he would not get the chance, that Jack Bellfield gallantly toled Mrs. De Fer in advance, talking to her in his sprightliest strain, and bringing merry little peals from the French lady that sounded crisp and musical as they echoed over the snow. Jack would far rather have walked with Nelsie Loraine, but as it was Raymund's birthday party, the latter should have all the prizes. Jack had a happy faculty, when in the company of one person, of never letting that person suspect for a moment that he would rather have been with somebody else.

Raymund, finding himself beside Nelsie Loraine, at a litttle distance from the others, said, "I am going to ask you to let me off from your party, Nelsie Loraine."

"Let you off?" echoed the other in displeasure. "Of course, if you don't want to come to-morrow night, I don't want you to come!"

"I am much obliged," said Raymund, "for I don't want to come!"

Nelsie Loraine's little feet made very decided crunching in the snow for a few steps, and then she remarked, "I wish I'd known it before I came to yours, Mr. Revore!"

"But I want to tell you why I don't want to come," said Raymund, hesitating. He found it hard to explain. He went on: "If only you were to be there, I wouldn't mind. But you will have a house full of people in fine clothes, and I haven't anything to wear that would look right. Everybody would see that I was out of place, and I would be out of place. I would be ashamed, and if you cared anything about me, you would be ashamed for me."

"I will never be ashamed of you," said Nelsie Loraine, stopping suddenly, "and nobody else shall be ashamed. We don't care about your clothes. I want you to come. Do you remember once you promised to do me a favor some day, if I asked it? Now, this is the favor I ask: that you come to my party. If I thought you didn't want to come, it would be different. But if it's just your clothes, that's no excuse."

When Nelsie Loraine looked at him that way, Raymund couldn't have refused. "I'll come," he said. At the same time he felt that he would not enjoy her party. Her eyes softened and she smiled. "All right!" she said, "you'd better!"

When they reached the Omer mansion in the next yard, Nelsie Loraine shook hands with Jack and Raymund, and said, "Good night; I never enjoyed a party so much in all my life!" And Mrs. De Fer said the same. Suddenly Jack caught Raymund's arms and cried, "Here, Nelsie Loraine, you haven't beaten him thirteen times and one more to grow on!"

Nelsie Loraine laughed and started at Raymund with her arm lifted, and Raymund did not try very hard to break loose from Jack. At that moment the door opened, and Mrs. Omer looked out, saying, "It is very late, Mrs. De Fer, very late!"

Nelsie Loraine found herself caught in a rather ridiculous attitude, but she went up to Raymund, and instead of patting him on the back, seized his hand again, and shook it and said quite distinctly, so that everybody might hear, "Good night, Raymund. Be sure and come to my party. I will never forget your thirteenth birthday, as long as I live!" Then she ran into the house, her cheeks almost as red as Tom's, because she knew she had pleased Raymund and displeased Mrs. Omer; and perhaps because she had pleased herself, too.

Raymund Revore and Jack Bellfield returned to the Hands' House, where there was much work to be done. Beds were to be carried back to their accustomed places, cedar hangings to be torn away, the labyrinth to be demolished. All the muslin and cotton cloth not injured by use in the labyrinth would be accepted at the merchant's, and it was their care to save as much as possible. Jack, whose borrowed horse was in the stable, was to sleep with Raymund; but it was a long time before anybody but Baby could close his eyes. The time after a party is over is usually a busy time, but this birthday party of Raymund's was attended by an unusually exciting aftermath. When Tom's bed had been put up and Baby placed in it, the next move was to get Houndpup down from his Lion's Den. He would not hear to coming down in one of the chairs-in-the-air, and in his terrified struggles overturned the lake. The water poured over the loosely-placed floor and rained down upon Tom's bed. Baby woke up, but he kept in a good humor. No doubt he agreed with Socrates, that after so much thunder, no wonder there was a little rain; but his good humor did not save them from changing all the bed clothes. It was midnight before the weary workers extended their tired bodies between the sheets.

When Raymund woke up the next morning he found that Jack had already risen and had left the room. Raymund jumped up. He knew Jack was not invited to Nelsie Loraine's party, but he had not thought Jack would be in such a hurry to go for his horse. One glance told him that the rolls of undamaged muslin and cotton cloth had been carried away; the next that his suit of clothes was gone, the next that Jack's new black suit hung just where it had been put when Jack undressed. Raymund jumped out of bed, and as he did so Tom and Fred looked in the door and shouted loudly, "Christmas gift!"

"Oh!" said Raymund, "I forgot it was Christmas!" His eye was caught by a note pinned to Jack's new coat.

"Hurry up and dress!" cried Tom, excitedly. "I want you to come in and see Baby. He has just opened his stocking, and his eyes are bulging as big as saucers!"

"Oh, it's great!" Fred cried. "The little feller has ever'thing he wanted!"

"I 'lowed he would have," said Tom, "ef I didn't have nothin' left myself."

But the youth was reading Jack's note:

"Dear Ray—Here you are; I've worn your clothes home; willing to swop, ain't you? This is my Christmas gift to you. They'll be a little too big for you, but you can eat and grow fat. Remember, don't you, how I kept wearing that white cloak last night? I didn't want Nelsie Loraine to get too well acquainted with this suit before she saw it on you. They won't be anybody at her party looking any nicer than you, I bet you there won't! Jack."

If Raymund had been a sporting character and had accepted this challenge he would have lost the bet; for at Nelsie Loraine's party nobody looked finer than he. As for his experiences there, his emotions were divided. During most of that party he felt lonesome, and kept wishing he could have stayed away. It was that kind of a party where each boy brings a girl, and sits with her, and nobody is loose; everything is in pairs. The amusement was dancing, and as Raymund did not dance, he could only look on. The dancing told him why Jack had not been invited. The minister's son would not dance, and he had plainly told his friends that he did not go to a party where dancing went on, because Jack wanted to be in all the sport, wherever he might be. The refreshments were passed about, as each boy sat by his girl, and Raymund sat alone, trying to look sociable over his ice cream and cake. It would have been very easy for any of the couples to have sat with him, and taken him a little into their comradeship; in that case it would not so much have mattered about Raymund coming alone. But Raymund was an orphan, who worked for his living, and nobody was disposed to go to any trouble on his account. Thus it was that the whole party was nearly over, and nobody had talked to Raymund except little Mrs. De Fer, whose part in the festivities was to cheer up whoever might not be having a good time. After the refreshments, there was more dancing; the music was furnished by a splendid orchestra from Kansas City. Nelsie Loraine made it a point to dance with every boy who asked her, and that, of course, was every boy at the party except Raymund. At last, when it was about time to go home, Nelsie Loraine suggested that they play "King William," whereupon there was much laughter and objecting and urging. Raymund had no intention of joining in the game, but Nelsie Loraine came to him in his lonesome corner and said: "I want you to play!" So he stood up with the rest. Nelsie Loraine generously offered to be "It," and she chose Raymund. He went into the middle of the circle and knelt down with her, and both of them were a good deal embarrassed, while high-toned singing went the round. When the circle, which acted the part of a Greek chorus in the drama, sang "Salute your bride an' kisser sweet," Raymund looked at Nelsie Loraine, expecting her to put her hands over her face and jump up, laughing, and run away. But instead of that, Nelsie Loraine only looked at Raymund with brilliant eyes, while the color came and went. So it seemed that she was waiting to be saluted, and Raymund kissed her. Then they "rose upon their feet." Just then Mrs. Omer came into the room, saying: "What is this song I hear? What game is this? This must cease!"

Nationalizing Our Anthem.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke, in a recent address before the Presbyterian General Assembly, remarked that "I love thy rocks and rills, Thy woods and templed hills," being especially intended for New England, are inadequate, and that the national anthem is in consequence not wholly national in its physical geography. He suggested the addition of these stanzas:

"I love thy inland seas,
Thy capes and giant trees,
Thy rolling plains;
Thy canons wild and deep,
Thy prairies' boundless sweep,
Thy rocky mountains steep,
Thy fertile mains;

"Thy domes, thy silvery strands,
Thy Golden Gate that stands
Afront the West;
Thy sweep and crystal air,
Thy sunlight everywhere—
O, land beyond compare,
I love thee best."

Of course, this threatens a dangerous precedent. The national anthem is like the Constitution, and once a country gets to amending those things, there is no end of it. For instance, upon reading Dr. Van Dyke's verses, "The Mobile Register" butts in at once with an Alabama stanza, mentioning:

"Thy pines and oyster beds,"

And "The Knoxville Sentinel" bespeaks for East Tennessee still another, running:

"Thy mountains full of stills."

A Kansas poet comes cantering to the front with this one for the Grasshopper State:

"I love thy Western lands,
Thy vast and droughty sands,
And treeless plains;
I love thy sunflowered fields,
Thy sometimes fruitful yields,
And hope for three square meals—
Lord, send us rains."

Preparedness is like unto a virtue, and, while we do not believe "America" will be amended, we stand prepared with this amendment for Missouri:

"I love thy river deeps,
Thy hills and forest keeps,
Thy flowers blown;
Thy pure, ambrosial air,
If there are anywhere
Maids even half so fair,
We would be shown."

The Wisdom of Love.

BY IAN MACLAREN.

It was the custom in the Free Kirk of Drumtochty that the minister should sit in the pulpit after service till the church had emptied. As the people streamed by on either side, none of them would have spoken to him, or shown any sign of recognition, for that would have been bad manners. But their faces softened into a kindly expression as they passed, and they conveyed as by an atmosphere that they were satisfied with the sermon. If the minister on his part had descended from the pulpit, and stood below in his gown and bands, shaking hands with all and sundry and making cheery remarks, the congregation would have been scandalized and would have felt that he had forgotten the dignity of his office. He was expected to keep his place with gracious solemnity, as a man who had spoken in the name of the Lord, and not to turn the church into a place of conversation. If he rose, and leaning over the side of the pulpit asked a mother how it fared with her sick daughter, or stretched out his hand to bid a young man welcome after years of absence from the glen, this rare act was invested with special kindliness, and the recipients, together with their friends, were deeply impressed. When old Bell Robb, who brought up the tail of the procession, used to drag a little in the passage with simple art, arranging her well-worn shawl or replacing the peppermint leaves in her Bible, in order that she might get a shake of the minister's hand, no one grudged her his word of good cheer, for they knew what a faithful soul she was and how kind she was to blind Majorie. And if the minister had a message for Bell to carry home to Majorie, and Bell boasted that she never went empty-handed, the glen was well content, for no one in its length and breadth had suffered so much as Majorie, and none was so full of peace. Donald Menzies would sometimes boldly stand at the pulpit foot upon occasion till the minister descended, but those were days in which his soul had just come out of prison, and he rejoiced upon his high places. Otherwise they departed quietly from the house of God. Then the minister went up through the silent church to his little vestry, and it was his custom to turn at the door and look down the church to the pulpit, imagining the people again in their pews, and blessing in his heart the good men and women who were now making their way by country roads to their distant homes.

To-day John Carmichael sits in the pulpit with his head bent and buried in his hands, for he has been deeply humbled. When he was appointed to the Free Kirk he knew that he could not preach, for that had been faithfully impressed upon him in his city assistantship; but it was given him during his first six months, face to face with the critics of the glen, to learn how vast was his incapacity. Unto the end of his ministry he never forgot the hours of travail, as he endeavored to prepare an exposition and a sermon for the Sunday service. He read every commentary on the passage which he possessed, and every reference in the books of dogma; he hunted literature through for illustrations, and made adventurous voyages into science for analogies. There was no field from which he did not painfully gather, except conventional religious anecdotage, which in even his hours of despair he refused to touch. Brick by brick he built up his house, and then on Sunday it would tumble to pieces in his hands, and present nothing but a heap of disconnected remarks for the consideration of the people. This morning he had come to a halt trying to expound the dispute over meat offered to idols in the first epistle to the Corinthians, and he had omitted one head of his sermon and the whole of the practical application. Simply because he was nervous and his memory had failed. But he could not conceal from himself that if there had been any real unity in his thinking, and if he had been speaking at first hand, he would not have been so helpless. The people were very patient, and had made no complaint, but there was a limit, and it must have been reached. Besides, it was not honorable or tolerable that a man should undertake the duties of a profession and not be able to discharge them. It was now evident that he could not preach, and it did not seem likely he would ever be able to do so; and as in the Kirk no man can even have the most modest success or the narrowest sphere of labor unless he can produce some sort of sermon, his duty seemed plain. He had not chosen the ministry of his own accord, but had entered it to please one whose kindness he could never repay; his action had been a service of piety, but it had been a mistake in practice, and one thing only remained for him. During the week he would consult the only person affected by the step and resign his charge. The people trooping up with nothing but friendly thoughts of him could not guess how bitter a cup their minister was drinking, but the sound of their footsteps fell upon his heart like drops of fire. There were other fields open to him, and he might live to do good work in his day; but his public life had started with a disastrous failure, and as long as he lived he would walk humbly. When the last of the congregation had left, and there was not a sound except a thrush welcoming spring with his cheerful note, and caring not that winter had settled down upon a human soul, Carmichael rose and crept up the forsaken church, a broken man.

As he stood in the vestry his chin sank on his chest, and he resolved to wait there for a little, lest a straggler should be loitering about the manse gate. Some one knocked at the door. It was the elder, who, of all the session, was chiefly loved and respected. As soon as Carmichael saw his face he knew as by instinct why he had come, and what he was going to say. If there were any difficult task in the congregational life requiring both courage and delicacy, it was laid on Angus Sutherland, and he never failed to acquit himself well. Never had he come on a more unwelcome errand, and Carmichael felt that he must make the course as smooth as possible, for without doubt the elder had been sent to make a just complaint. It required a brave man to come, and Carmichael must also play the man, so he pulled himself together and gave a courteous, and, so far as he could, a cheerful welcome to the good elder.

"It is good weather that we are having, sir," began Angus, speaking English with the soft Gaelic accent, for he was a West Highlander, who had settled in the glen; "it is good to see the beginning of spring. We will be hoping that the Spirit of God may make spring in our own hearts, and then we shall also be lifting up our voices. But I must not be detaining you, when you will be very tired with your work, and be needing rest. Maybe I should not be troubling you at all at this time, but I have been sent by the elders with a message, not because I am better than my brethren, but only because it is my fortune to be a little older."

Carmichael knew then that he was right in his anticipation, and he asked Angus to say what was given him frankly, and to make no delay. And he tried to speak gently and humbly, for in truth his own conscience was with the elders, and, as he believed, their embassy.

"You may not know, sir, but I will be telling you, that after the service is over, and the people have gone out from the house of God, the elders speak together below the big beech tree, and their speech will be about the worship and the sermon. You are not to think," added Angus with a gracious smile, "that they will be criticising what is said, or hardening their hearts against the council of the Lord declared by the mouth of his servant. Oh, no, we will rather be storing up the bread of God, that we may eat thereof during the days of the week, and have strength for the way."

Carmichael assured Angus that he knew how fair-minded and kind-hearted the elders were, both in word and deed. And braced himself for what was coming.

"This morning," continued Angus, "the elders were all there, and when we looked at one another's faces we were judging that the same things will be in our hearts. It was with us for weeks, and it was growing, and to-day it came to speech. We knew that we were not meeting together as the session, and it is not business I will be coming with; we met as the elders of the flock, and it is as your friend that I am here in much humility. But it is not easy for this man to say what has been laid upon him."

Carmichael was sorry for him, and signed to him to go on.

"You were chosen, I will be reminding you," said Angus with a gracious expression on his face, "by the good will of all the people; and it was a very proud day when the clerk of the Presbytery stood in his place and said that the call would be left with the elders, so that all the people might be having the opportunity of signing it, and I stood up and replied to the reverend gentleman, 'It is not necessary, they have all signed.' Oh, yes, and so they had, every man and every woman that was upon the roll. And the young people, they had written their names, too, upon the paper of adherence, every one above 16 years of age. And the very children would be wishing that day that they had something to sign, for the hearts of the people had gone out toward you, and there was one voice in every mouth, 'Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.'"

Carmichael gave Angus to understand that he would never forget those things while he lived, and he prayed God that he might be a better man for the people's confidence in him. But his heart was beginning to break as he thought of their bitter disappointment, and the trust which had failed in his hands.

"It is three months since you entered upon your ministry among us, and you will not be angry with me if I am saying to you that you are very young to have so heavy a weight upon you, for there is no burden like the burden of souls. And the elders will be noticing and so will all the people, for they are not without understanding in Drumtochty, that you are giving yourself with all your mind and all your heart unto the work of the Lord. The people are seeing that whatsoever talents the Lord has been pleased to give are laid out at usury, and they are judging you very faithful, both in your study and in their homes. But," softening his voice till it was like a whisper at eventide, "you are very young, and the ministry of the Lord is very arduous."

Amid all his suffering Carmichael could not help admiring the courtesy and consideration with which Angus presented the petition of the session, which he was perfectly certain by this time was a suggestion that he should resign. He asked Angus to declare at once all that was in his mind.

"So the elders considered that the full time had come for their saying something to you, and I was charged by them all to wait upon you in this place, and to say unto you on behalf of the elders of the flock and all the flock which is under your care" (and now it is impossible to imagine the tenderness in his voice), "that we are all thankful unto God that he sent you to be our minister, and that we are all wondering at the treasures of truth and grace which you will be bringing to us every Sabbath, for we are being fed with the finest of the wheat. Oh, yes, it is not the chaff of empty words, but the white bread of God which is given unto the people, and the very children will have their portion, and will be saying pleasant words about the minister as they go along the road."

Carmichael was as one that had dreamed, for no man had ever spoken of his preaching after this fashion. This strange thing also happened, while a minute before the manhood in him had been strong, it had now began to weaken and fail, and Angus still continued:

"The elders also will be noticing that your words are heaven laden with the greatness of the truth, and that you are sometimes brought to silence, as it has happened unto God's prophets in the ancient time. We will all be wanting to hear everything that the Lord has given unto you, and to lay it past even unto the smallest grain in our souls; and so if at any time it appears unto you as if some part of the message has not been given, you should go over the truth again, and if it would be helping you to meditate for a space we would all be glad to sing a psalm. For we have plenty of time and it is good to be in the Kirk of Drumtochty during those days."

Carmichael was learning that hour that kindness takes all the pride even out of a young man, and turns him into a little child. As he could find no words, and indeed was afraid that he had no voice wherewith to utter them, Angus went on his way without interruption, and came to the end in much peace.

"There is just one other thing that the brethern laid upon me to say, and it was Donald Menzies who would not let me go till I had promised, and you will not be considering it a liberty from the elders. You are never to be troubled in the pulpit, or be thinking about anything but the word of the Lord and the souls of the people, of which you are the shepherd. We will ask you to remember when you stand in your place to speak to us in the name of the Lord, that as the smoke goeth up from the homes of the people in the morning, so will their prayers be ascending for their ministers, and as you look down upon us before you begin to speak, maybe you will say to yourself, next Sunday, they are all loving me. Oh, yes, and it will be true from the oldest to the youngest, we will all be loving you very much."

Angus Sutherland was like all his kind, a very perfect gentleman, and he left immediately, so gently that Carmichael did not hear his going. When the minister passed through the garden gate half an hour afterwards there was no man to be seen, but the birds on every branch were in full song, and he marked that the hawthorn had begun to bloom. And that is why John Carmichael remained in the ministry of Jesus Christ, the most patient and most mindful of masters.—The British Weekly.

REGIMENTAL REUNIONS AND FORTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY BATTLE CHICKAMAUGA,

CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 18-20, 1906.

On September 18, 1906, will occur the forty-third anniversary of the Battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle and the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19 and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notabe gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates, the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first and last time since they marched from its blood-stained fields, forty-three years ago.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long until none will be left to do this noble work.

It will be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

For a Little Girl of Three.

Moo, moo!
What can I do
For my little girl of three?
I will eat the sweet grass,
I will give her a glass
Of my milk for her tea;
Moo, moo! that's what I'll do
For my dear little maiden of three.
Mew, mew!
What can I do
For my little girl of three?
I will catch all the mice,
And they shall not come twice
To the cake, you'll see;
Mew, mew! that's what I'll do
For my sweet little maiden of three.
Bow, wow!
I will go now
With my little girl of three;
I will make a great noise;
I will frighten the boys,
For they all fear me;
Bow, wow! that is just how
I'll guard my sweet maiden of three.
Neigh, neigh!
Out of the way,
For my little girl of three!
I will give her a ride,
We will canter and glide
O'er the meadow lea;
Neigh, neigh! that's just the way
I'll help my sweet maiden of three.

Kenneth's Special Policeman.

BY HILDA RICHMOND.

"Mr. Policeman, Mr. Policeman! Wait a minute, won't you?" called Kenneth, as he came panting down the path to the blue-coated man. "I want to tell you something."

"Well, sonny, what is it?" asked the big man, good-naturedly.

"I'd like to have some bad boys arrested, and Jane says you do such things," explained the small boy. "They hide behind the hedge every day and upset the basket of clothes some little girls have in their wagons.'

"Who are the boys?"

"I don't know. I'm only visiting grandma, and don't know anybody in this town. The little girls cry every day because the clean clothes are rolled in the dirt, but they can't help it. They say their mamma gets scolded for not having the things cleaner, but it isn't her fault. Jane, she's grandma's cook, said the policeman was the only person that could do anything with the bad boys, so I have been watching for you two days. I told the boys they were mean cowards, and they rolled me in the dirt, too. I didn't mind that very much because the girls could run away, but this afternoon they will do the very same thing."

"I'm sorry, sonny, that I can't help you out, but I'm a special policeman, and can't stay in this part of town. You see, the merchants pay me to go on duty at three in the afternoon, and I'm about town till after midnight. I wish I could be here when they tease the poor girls, but that is just the time I am downtown. This place is so far out that the regular man hardly ever comes unless he's sent for. I wish you could find out just who the boys are, and then we could get at them."

"I wonder if I couldn't hire a policeman all by myself," said Kenneth. "I have some money that mamma gave me, and I'd rather spend it that way than any other. How much do you suppose it will cost?"

"Not so very much, I think," said the man with the brass buttons. "I'll see to it when I go downtown, and perhaps this very afternoon you may see a special policeman waiting for the boys. I must go now, and you need not mention to the boys what you have done. They might get scared, and the man couldn't catch them."

Kenneth could hardly eat his dinner that day, and as soon as it was over he hurried down to the hedge to watch for the special policeman. He had his bank hidden behind a big apple-tree to pay him as soon as he should catch the bad boys, and it seemed to him the long hours would never pass. Presently he heard the clock away up in the Town Hall steeple strike one, and it almost seemed as if he had waited a week. Jane always served dinner early, and the little boy was at his post almost before noon.

And when the policeman came he didn't have a blue coat at all. He looked like Kenneth's papa or any other man, and Kenneth was disappointed.

"I thought the boys wouldn't see me in these clothes as soon as if I wore a blue suit," he explained to Kenneth. "I'm going to hide behind the hedge, and when the little girls come by with their wagon, you give a little whistle. We'll catch those bad boys if we are not too noisy."

"And haven't you got a badge?" asked Kenneth.

The policeman gravely pulled out a bright blue-and-gold ribbon, with some letters on it, and pinned it to his vest. I'll wear it under my coat," he said, "and if the boys don't believe I'm a policeman I can show them."

The big man and the small boy had such a fine time talking in the shade that three o'clock came before they knew it. They took their places, and it was not long before the little girls came down the sidewalk with their big basket of nicely ironed clothes piled high in the wagon. They were hurrying past the lonely orchard as fast as possible, but in a few minutes the boys, who had been playing on the commons heard the rattle of the wagon and rushed after them to torment them.

The low whistle sounded, and all at once from behind the hedge popped out Kenneth's policeman. "You, John Jones and George Reed and Tom Barton," he called. "Stay right where you are! You'll pay for this work," and he grabbed the astonished boys as they were dumping the clothes out of the basket. "Walk along with me."

"Wait a minute!" called Kenneth, coming with the red bank. "I haven't paid you yet."

"Those apples you gave me paid the bill," said the special policeman. "I'm glad to have the pleasure of punishing these young rascals. If you hear of any more such cases, just send for me again."

"What do you think?" said Jane in great excitement that evening. "The mayor took those bad boys to their parents this afternoon, and they are going to break up the gang of rowdies that frighten children in this town. I wonder who told him about the way the boys soiled the clean clothes?"

Kenneth didn't know what the mayor of a town was.—Christian Advocate.

Travel Right to Oklahoma

The Missouri, Kansas & Texas R'y has recently inaugurated additional daily trains for Oklahoma City, Guthrie, Cleveland, Bartlesville, Coffeyville, etc. With this added service the M. K. & T. R'y is the logical line between St. Louis and Kansas City and all principal points in Oklahoma.

Change of cars is one of the greatest inconveniences of travel. You don't have to change cars if you travel via the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway. Through trains (over its own rails) run between St. Louis and Kansas City and Oklahoma City, Dallas, Ft. Worth, San Antonio and Galveston. All through trains have Chair Cars and Pullman Sleepers.

How To Go

When you have occasion to travel, use the same discrimination in buying a ticket that you would in buying anything else. Assure yourself in advance of what you may expect in the way of comfort and convenience en route. If there is any information you want about a prospective trip, write me. J. W. Monser's "The Literature of the Disciples" ought to be read by every member of the Christian Church. We will send it postpaid for 35 cents. If a preacher will send his own renewal and $1.50 for the new subscription, we will send him this new book as a premium.

It is requiring larger editions of Brother W. W. Dowling's Bible school papers, books and lesson helps than ever before to satisfy the demand for them from every part of the land, but our facilities for production are so improved we can quickly fill all orders. Send for samples. The best cost no more than you will be asked elsewhere for very indifferent supplies.

Go with us to Buffalo. This promises to be the most interesting National convention in our history up to 1909. There will be cheap excursions to Niagara, Thousand Isles, Toronto and other interesting places. Scores of our readers can easily earn their transportation there and greatly benefit their friends and congregations at the same time. Write us for particulars.

The picture of our Editor we are giving as a premium for one renewal and one new subscription, accompanied by $3.00, is an excellent likeness, 11x12½, done in photo-brown on durable material, and bearing his autograph signature. With the present day popularity of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we believe each of our readers may easily possess this picture that will become more and more valuable as the years roll on.

We can supply our readers with any book published and secure for them the best bound and printed copies and at the lowest prices. We respectfully protest against our brethren purchasing through secular houses when by patronizing "home industry" they can, without cost to themselves, build up within our ranks a publishing house creditable to our brotherhood and vastly helpful in enlarging the borders of the Kingdom.

While the tide of our circulation is being heightened and deepened and widened chiefly by the Philips bringing the Nathanaels to us, yet we are frequently gratified at receiving "schools" of new readers from single churches. Among them we note: Peoria, Ill., 35, H. F. Burns, minister; Meridian, Miss., 9, S. H. Cozine, pastor; Blakesburg, Ia., 3; Cottage Grove, Ore., 10, D. R. Harris, minister; Colfax, Ill., 5, N. H. Robertson, pastor; Normal, Ill., 40, R. H. Newton, minister; Minier, Ill., 5, E. Couch, pastor; Pekin, Ill., 81, Jas. A. Barnett, minister; the general superintendent was given 17 new subscriptions at the Texas convention, and 8 new ones were given our representative at the Michigan convention.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has rejected hundreds of dollars' worth of proffered advertisements of patent medicines and speculative schemes. But of all the good friends who wrote us that the presence of such advertisements was inconsistent with Christian journalism, and the many who have congratulated us on the freedom of our columns from such matter, but two have enclosed subscriptions. We are glad to get such letters, but it gives them a ring of earnestness and good fellowship when by sending subscriptions the writers help us even a little to bear this added cost.

How Ants Keep and Milk Cows.

One of the most interesting and wonderful facts about ants is that they keep "cows," that they herd them, feed and care for them, milk them, and altogether behave toward them about the same as men behave to the cows kept by the human race. Under the title, "Insect Herds and Herders," Dr. Henry C. McCook, the ant specialist, and president of the American Entomological Society, tells how the ants herd and milk their cows. The author selects the mound-making ants of the Alleghanies (Formica exsectoides Forel) as his theme, and reveals the fact that the so-called cows kept by these insects are no other than the aphides, or "plant lice," which infest rose-bushes, and from which the ants obtain, by an actual milking process, a transparent fluid very valuable in their food economy.

The Guinea Pig and the Kitten.

It is wonderful how animals, though perhaps natural enemies, make friends if brought up together with kindness.

When we were children we were given a pair of guinea pigs: one was pure white with red eyes, and the other brown and white; we named them Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee.

We were very excited about their arrival and made all sorts of elaborate arrangements for their comfort. Besides a hutch and two kinds of runs, we arranged a complete diet for the week, written out with great care on a piece of sermon-paper!

As they were the joint property of three of us there was some difficulty as to the ownership, but one of our elder sisters coming to the rescue, settled that we were each to give them a meal every day, the meal being a different one each day.

But, sad to say, even these arrangements could not preserve our piggies' lives, and one day the brown one died very suddenly of heart failure.

After this sad event the white one was rather miserable till, a few months after, a little gray kitten was added to our menagerie, when these two speedily became fast friends.

They ate their meals out of the same saucer, sat cuddled up together in the same hutch, and if the kitten was separated from the guinea pig for more than a few minutes it began the most plaintive miewing. But almost the funniest thing was to see them playing together—kittie with guarded paw, so as not to hurt Tweedle-dum with her sharp claws, and the guinea pig running hither and thither, quite enjoying the fun.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

American Corn the Food of Nations.

It has come to light that Italy, Belgium and Ireland are using more American corn, in proportion to the population, than we do in this country. What we call "mush," is known in Italy as "polenta," and it is sold in great quantities, in its cold state, at two cents a pound. Belgium imports from us about 12,000,000 bushels of corn a year.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
  Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
  The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
  For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
  Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
  And the song of victory.

CHURCHES OF CHRIST

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

Pittsburg is only three and a half years distant. This means the hour has struck when countless good intentions should be translated into achievements and gazetted in our statistical reports. The earlier it is done the greater will the achievement be through its cumulative effects on the brotherhood. Each present sacrifice will be a factor in the accomplishment of the work the worshipper has immediately in view, but the ashes of that burned mortgage or the debris of the old outgrown building giving place to a worthier one will be as seed wheat dying in the ground that above them may spring many temples, schools, missionaries, orphanages and hospitals.

Had R. F. Thrapp, of Jacksonville, Ill., waited till 1909 to build that magnificent church home, he would simply have added one edifice to our church equipment of the first century, but, dedicated in 1906, it will lend the inspiration enabling the first to bequeath at least a score of beautiful new edifices to the second century of the Restoration.

It is barely possible T. A. Abbott could have secured that $20,000 for the permanent fund of the Missouri Missionary Society easier next year than this; but he was working for twoscore other commonwealths, as well as for our own imperial state, and in the great centennial missionary harvest home this opportune triumph by the Nestor of our state secretaries will be duly celebrated by grateful colleagues who have been helped into the possession of endowment funds by his consecrated enterprise.

"He who strikes first strikes twice," was one of Napoleon's axioms. Now is the very nick of time in which to bring contemplated work to completion. A church built, a debt paid, a missionary sent forth, a great revival, or orphanage endowed in 1909 would be the placing of a golden service on our centennial altar, but the doing of them right now would be like opening a gold mine to the workmen of the Lord and saying to more than a million of us, "Come, delve for the Master, and let us fill his treasury with purest gold!"

Centennial Propaganda.

This department has been commissioned by our editorial management to the development of Centennial ideas and enthusiasm. It is an open parliament. Suggestions are welcomed and particularly reports of things actually done for the enhancement of the material and spiritual prosperity of Zion. Through these columns tell, for their inspirational effect on our thousands of Disciple readers, of dedications and liquidations, of notable proselytings to the true faith and conversions from the world, of splendid benefactions and heroic and availing sacrifices for the extension of primitive Christianity throughout the earth.

Sometimes in "looking towards Pittsburg" we can see it best by directing our gaze via Brush Run, and Cane Ridge and other historical scenes. Therefore, we welcome communications from the Moores, Loos's, Carpenters, Lamptons, Corwines, Teachouts, Manires, Lucas's, Dungans and all others of that grand host who are supposed to be specially familiar with the old landmarks, to the end that we make no digressions from the true paths requiring us to retrace our steps before triumphantly entering Pittsburg in 1909.

Most who have written heretofore have done so in advocacy of introducing The Christian-Evangelist into every Christian home. That would be a helpful preliminary, but it ought to be a preliminary quickly attended to that we might go on and do the very things urged upon us by the many contributors to this special organ of a great convention. Send us your best ideas and reports dedicated to 1809-1909.

Our Centennial Co-Laborers.

I think The Christian-Evangelist gets better all the time. I wish you Godspeed. —Mrs. M. C. Long, Baxter Springs, Kan.

I have just closed a fine meeting, in which The Christian-Evangelist played its part.—G. Wesley Campbell, minister, Wickliffe, Ky.

I believe that all who take The Christian-Evangelist one year will take it all their lives, or while they take a Christian paper.—John A. Webb.

The Christian-Evangelist is full of the Spirit of the Master—firm, true and sweet spirited. It will win.—Mrs. Latina L. Crum, Elcampo, Texas.

You have my best wishes and sympathy in your work of preaching the Gospel through your most excellent paper.—A. A. Farrington, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Enclosed find $1.50. I am past 78 years old, and have taken this paper continuously since 1868, and expect to continue as long as I am able to read.—J. C. Keeler, Ottawa, Kan.

We could not get along without The Christian-Evangelist. We consider it a letter from all our brethren, and a source of great pleasure in our home.—T. R. Tisdale, Ogden, Utah.

I am a friend of The Christian-Evangelist and you can count on my doing all in my power for your splendid paper. I like its broad, Christlike spirit.—J. Edward Cresmer, minister.

Enclosed find money order in payment of a list of ten new subscribers to The Christian-Evangelist. To my mind, it is the best religious journal published, and I have had during the past year at Oberlin Seminary, opportunity to examine many other papers. May God continue to bless you in your good work.—R. B. Chapman, North Eaton, O.

I believe in winning people to Christ and getting them to accept primitive Christianity strictly by love and truth as taught in the Bible, and through association with denominational church members working with them to a legitimate degree, but never accepting nor acknowledging their creeds or anything other than was the practice of the Disciples of Christ.—Herb Lewis, Gravette, Ark.

I enclose $1.50 to renew my Christian-Evangelist, which I regard as the very best of the many I read. It is imbued with the spirit, while a number seem to be contending for the letter, which, if it does not kill, will leave a number "in frigid isolation." The sweet spirit of forbearance manifested by Brother Garrison is certainly commendable.—Mrs. J. F. Roscoe, Hopkinsville, Ky.

The circulation of The Christian-Evangelist I believe to be the best and the cheapest missionary work. I have paid for all the new subscribers that I have ever sent you from Texas except one or two. I have personally paid for 20 or 30 new subscribers and in every case it has been manifest it has done great good. Had I known in time there was going to be so much discussion of the union question and church federation, I would have spent several dollars more last winter. The Christian-Evangelist is the best vehicle for spreading the Gospel that we have. I have sent it to Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterian preachers and to some of our anti-brethren and to a few leading members of some of our new churches, and nowhere else could I have spent money that would have done so much good in spreading the glad tidings of Good News.—N. Montgomery, Venus, Texas.

I have taken The Christian-Evangelist this last year, and like its spirit very much. It is evident the union that we have prayed, worked, and stood for all our days is not coming in just the way we had planned so definitely, but it is on the way, and, like you, I see we must recognize the trend of things, take what we can get and work on, expecting yet to see the consummation of our hopes. The sects can, and are, dropping things that have been thought essential, and finally will have to round up to the position we have taken, discarding unscriptural names, and coming to the simple gospel teaching in form and doctrine. We must be patient and willing to hope and wait. How hard it is to have faith enough to wait! I will renew my subscription and watch the battle royal for federation. Brother —— is going to the utmost extreme, as usual, and whereunto this will grow we know not. I will try to secure subscribers.—Mrs. C. R. Harmon, Aurora, O.

A New Ally

At Hammond, Ind., there has appeared a new force for righteousness, a new ally on the side of law enforcement and quiet Sundays — namely, the saloon keepers. It is no sudden spasm of virtue on the part of the tapsters, but a wily move. Governor Hanly has insisted that the police commissioners of Hammond shall enforce the Sunday closing law. Heretofore the law has been subjected to that sort of liberal construction which means destruction. The Liquor Dealers' Association has given notice by placards publicly posted that it will file affidavits and prosecute all persons engaged in any sort of labor on Sunday. This means street car employes, hotel and restaurant keepers, newspaper people, drug clerks, and all purveyors of amusements. Perhaps it will also mean the cooks in private families and even the house-wife who does her own cooking. The dispatches state that the action of the liquor dealers is being much criticised, but we do not see that they are open to criticism. If the law as it stands at present forbids all these activities on Sunday the law ought to be enforced until it can be repealed. It is perfectly true that, if the community can permit what we have been in the habit of considering necessary and beneficial Sunday work only by a lax enforcement of law, then we have no right to complain if the saloon keepers expect a similarly lax enforcement of the Sunday law with respect to their business. We do not think the interests of morality, religion or civilization require the effective prohibition of all labor on Sunday, and we are very certain that the public sentiment which is the basis of law does not demand it. But it is equally certain that whatever laws are made should be enforced. If they are unwise laws, enforcement will exhibit their unwisdom and they can be repealed. It may be pointed out that the chief objection to Sunday saloons is not that it requires the barkeepers to work, but that it permits the operation of a demoralizing influence on a day which, of all days, ought to be free from demoralizing influences. We do not know whether the present laws of Indiana do prohibit all forms of labor on Sunday. If they do not, the threat of the saloon keepers need not cause any alarm. If they do the saloon keepers have the strong side of the argument.

International Postage.

A reduction in the rate of foreign postage has been made by the Universal Postal Congress, which recently met in Rome. This congress represents all of the civilized countries in the world and some which are not entirely civilized. Through its agency in 1878 the uniform rate for foreign postage within the postal union was adopted, five cents for fifteen grams (half-ounce) and two cents for cards. The recent action of the congress raised the limit of weight from fifteen to twenty grams, that is from half to two-thirds of an ounce. As foreign postage was already one of the cheapest conveniences in the world, this reduction gives ground for hope that we may live to see the day of one-cent domestic postage and a parcel-post rate which will compare favorably with the rate offered by most of the European countries.

Congress and Pure Food.

If we have been accustomed to think of the Senate as the dilatory branch of our national legislative body, we must modify the judgment and give the House its share of the blame. It took the Senate only five days to pass an adequate meat inspection bill in harmony with the President's suggestions. The House has spent three weeks on it and has gotten no farther than to give favorable consideration to a substitute measure that is wholly different in tone and will have a fair chance of being vetoed even if it is passed. Moreover, the House has killed so much time on the pure food bill that it is wholly probable that the session will end with this very important piece of legislation incomplete. The committee on agriculture seems a good deal more solicitous about the effect of the meat bill on the packing industry than about the effect of the meat on the public. The President has let it be understood by a letter to Mr. Wadsworth that the House substitute for the Beveridge meat bill which was passed by the Senate is not satisfactory. The chief differences between the two measures are as follows: The Senate bill puts the cost of inspection on the packers; the House bill puts it on the government. The Senate bill makes the secretary of agriculture the final judge of questions arising from the inspection; the House bill gives the circuit courts the right of review. The Senate bill requires the date to be placed upon all inspection labels; the House bill does not. The Senate bill forbids the sale of any product under a false or misleading name; the House bill adds that this shall not be construed to interfere with the use of usual trade names. (Does this include the thousand trade names of "potted chicken" for ancient veal?) The Senate bill prohibits slaughtering at night; the House bill permits it. The Senate bill exempts from inspection animals killed by farmers on their farms; the House bill extends the exemption to retail butchers and dealers. The Senate bill requires that inspectors be appointed under civil service regulations; the House bill permits appointments for one year without regard to civil service rules. Of these changes the President frankly says that every one is a change for the worse.

"None but the brave can eat the fare," says Prof. H. W. Wiley, the government's food expert, with reference to the meat products now under investigation. His testimony is that all sorts of canned goods are apt to deteriorate with age and should, therefore, be dated. In government contracts for supplies of this sort, it is always specified that the goods shall be canned after the date of the contract.

A Dead-Lock Canal.

It is suggested that the present situation in congress indicates that we shall have neither a sea-level nor a lock canal at Panama, but a dead-lock canal. The Senate has gone on record as favoring the sea-level program. The House has passed an appropriation of $25,000,000 conditioned on the adoption of the lock plan. The latter action was taken hastily and without committee recommendation. It is just possible that it indicates rather a desire to cause delay by getting at cross purposes with the Senate, than any special conviction in favor of a lock canal.

Gov. Pattison.

John M. Pattison, governor of Ohio, died very suddenly last week, after an administration of only five months. He was elected on the Democratic ticket after a campaign in which the real issue was the continuance of machine rule in Ohio. The previous year the Republican party as represented by Roosevelt had carried Ohio by 225,000, but in 1905 the Democratic party on an anti-machine ticket elected Pattison governor, though all of the other Republican nominees on the state ticket were elected. Lieutenant Governor A. L. Harris, who has already succeeded to the office of governor, is a Republican, and the latest reports are that he is ill. In the event of his death the governorship would again pass to the Democrats.

Mr. Bryan Once More.

Mr. Bryan has again been mentioned for the presidency, or rather for the Democratic nomination for the presidency, which is not quite the same thing. Mr. Bryan, who is now in Russia on his round-the-world journey, professed surprise on receiving the news, but his surprise was not shared by many other people. Few politicians, or even statesmen, have ever been able to survive two overwhelming defeats, a shelving by his party over one campaign, and a total change of issues. But after all these vicissitudes and mutations, Mr. Bryan is still politically alive. Perhaps the change of issues was what saved him. At any rate, here he is. While one would scarcely like to say that he is the probable nominee, it would be hard at present to mention any one who is more so. As for Harper's Weekly's suggestion of Woodrow Wilson—a suggestion which seems to have been taken much more seriously than was originally intended—that is too good to be true.

A commission appointed by the British government to investigate the expenditures in connection with the Boer war, is finding food for reflection. On one contract amounting to about a million dollars the graft amounted to over half that sum. Without showing a mean spirit we are perhaps entitled to extract what comfort we may out of the evidence that all the graft in the world is not concentrated in the United States.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. The Protestant Era; The Period of Reunion.

12. To What Conclusion?

To what conclusion do the foregoing facts point as to the duty of the various religious bodies toward the federation movement? If the ideal toward which the Church must move is the unity among Christ's followers for which he prayed—a unity that by its self-evidencing power and by the co-operative effectiveness of its several parts, will convince the world of Christ's divine nature and mission; and if that unity, which is yet in the future, can only be realized as the various members of the one body come into vital touch with its living Head; if conscience is not to be sacrificed for the sake of a forced unity, and conscience can best be enlightened, both as to the need and method of union, by free intermingling and co-operation of believers, as shown by the experience of the past; if the ideal unity is not to be reached by "a single bound," any more than heaven is so reached, but its glorious heights attained "round by round," the conclusion is as inevitable as the logic of facts can make it, that it is the duty of the various groups of Christians designated as churches, or denominations, to co-operate as far as they can see their way clear to do so, for the manifestation of the common life and the common faith which they have, and for the better accomplishment of those ends and aims which require united action.

We have said that this is the plain duty of Christian bodies, but we feel justified in putting it even stronger than that: it is the inevitable trend of the Christian thought and life of our times. By this we mean that every living thing unfolds and develops according to the law of its life. The acorn is predestined by the law of life embodied in its germ to develop into an oak. It can not grow any other way. A grain of wheat is predestined by the law of its life to a certain process of development culminating in a stalk of ripened wheat. It can not grow or develop otherwise. The Church, in so far as it is an embodiment of divine life, must develop according to the law of that life—"the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus." The vital germ of this law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus is love, and love is essentially unifying. There is, therefore, absolutely no other line of development for the church of the future, if it be true to Christ, except in the direction of unity. This is why any prophet of God today may know that the present movement toward unity is to increase until it reaches the sublime culmination of a united church.

What we have said concerning the inevitableness of this trend toward unity applies only to those bodies which actually hold to Christ as their supreme authority, sharing in his life and moving in obedience, more or less perfect, to his divine will. It follows, of course, that the more fully any given religious body is under the control of Christ's will, and the more fully its members have become partakers of the divine life which is in Christ, the more swiftly will such a body move toward the fulfilment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers. This is a test which no religious body can evade. It is not an arbitrary one, but one that grows out of the very nature of things. No surer is it that Christ is the source of our life and of our unity, than that we approach toward that unity which he desired, for which he prayed, and which his Spirit inspires, just in proportion as we are brought under the spell of his divine personality, and are obedient to the leadership of his Spirit. This implies what we presume no one will deny, that no religious body is living wholly under the authority of Christ, and is in perfect conformity to his will, thereby perfectly exemplifying the unity and accomplishing the work which he desired. The assumption of perfection on the part of any religious body would be the surest proof of its estrangement from the Spirit of Christ, and of its unpreparedness for unity with others of his followers. Indeed, there is no need of any proclamation on that point, whatever, since there is an old-fashioned test which Christ gave to the world long ago, by which men and movements are measured—"By their fruits shall ye know them." The fruit of unity, therefore, among ourselves and with other followers of Christ, is the best possible proof that we are united with him.

What is the meaning of these facts if it be not that God is calling us to ultimate unity through the method of co-operation in all things wherein we are agreed? Can any religious body justify its holding aloof from this step toward unity on the ground that it has received special light on the subject of union and occupies more advanced ground than others? Does not that very fact, if it be a fact, furnish an additional reason why such a body should lend its strength to the weakness of the others in bringing about a closer unity? If such a body of Christians, because of its special advocacy of Christian union and its historic devotion to that cause, has gained some coign of vantage, does it not owe it to the religious world, and to him who has called it with this holy calling, to bring this light to bear in the most effective way on other religious people in order to hasten the end which we all desire? Indeed, does not such a body owe it to itself, unless it has attained to perfection, both in knowledge and practice, in faith and in character, to come into such close touch with other Christians that it may receive from them whatever they may have to confer.

To refuse assent to, and co-operation with, this movement toward unity on the plea that it is not the ideal unity of the New Testament, would be to ignore the whole law of progressive development in the kingdom of God. We lay this down as an axiomatic truth: It is as much our duty to manifest and put to some practical use the unity which already exists, as it is to labor and pray for an ideal unity that is yet far in the future. Indeed the way to hasten the ideal unity is to put to practical use the unity which we already have. "To him that hath shall be given, and to him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath," is a universal law in the kingdom of grace.

We are bound, therefore, by every consideration of loyalty to Jesus Christ, and by every regard for our future growth and development, to co-operate to the fullest extent possible,—which would be in different degrees, no doubt, in different places—with all who love and serve our Lord Jesus Christ for the advancement of his kingdom among men. This is what the federation movement means, and as such, it is the next logical step—the next inevitable step—toward the complete unity of Christians.

The Hannibal Convention.

The convention of the Christian Churches of Missouri which held its session in Hannibal from the 16th to the 20th instant, was the largest in the history of the state. It was really a four-fold convention made up of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Christian Endeavor, Bible School and State Missions. Each of these interests in turn held its sessions and all of them were marked by enthusiasm and splendid ability. The enrollment of delegates outside of Hannibal reached considerably above one thousand.

We have already reported, briefly, the convention of the C. W. B. M. From start to finish it was marked by that enthusiasm which is born of success. The president, Mrs. H. A. Denton, in her opening sentence announced the victory of the year, and, immediately following, the audience sang the doxology and thanks were offered to God for the success of the year. The women were all in a hopeful, confident mood. There was not a doubting (Mrs.) Thomas among them! Whatever the brethren may or may not do, these women are going on to accomplish their Centennial plans, and to increase their work along all lines under the constraining love of Christ. And this is the secret of their success; they have really entered into the spirit of their motto, "The Love of Christ Constraineth Us."

The Christian Endeavorers were there with something of their old time enthusiasm. A large number of the young people from the First Christian Church in this city, under the leadership of their pastor, Brother Brandt, were present and gave a model Christian Endeavor meeting on Sunday evening, and after all the services were over the young people gathered on the street corner and sang to a great crowd a number of Gospel hymns. An open parliament on the problems of the local society proved very helpful. We did not hear the address on "Twenty-five Years of Christian Endeavor," by H. W. Hunter, but we heard it highly commended. The reports of H. A. Denton, state superintendent of Christian Endeavor, and of Miss Martha Stout, state superintendent of the Junior Society, both showed encouraging results both as relates to growth in numbers and spiritual development.

The Bible school convention was presided over by the president, A. W. Kokendoffer, and his address was one of the features of the convention, lifting up the Bible school work to its proper place of dignity in the church. It would be impossible in our space to speak of the valuable features of this part of the convention. The addresses and the Round Table were of the highest order of excellence and we can not doubt but that this convention will mark an epoch in the Bible school work of Missouri. J. H. Hardin, state superintendent of this work, made his annual report for the part of the year he had served and gave valuable suggestions.

The State Missionary Society did not begin its convention until Tuesday afternoon. This was presided over by F. E. Udell, one of our active business men and church workers in St. Louis, and he presided in a business-like way throughout. The report of the board showed a decided gain, not only in financial receipts, but in evangelistic results. A summary of this report will be given elsewhere. One of the most desirable things achieved at the convention was the completion of the permanent fund of $20,000, the interest of which alone is to be used for the expense of administration in the mission work of the state, such as paying the salary of the corresponding secretary and for necessary postage, literature, etc. This fund is to be increased to $50,000 by our Centennial in 1909. Bro. T. A. Abbott, the corresponding secretary, who was unanimously re-elected, deserves special credit for his work in completing this amount and for his untiring labors during the year. The committee reports were well prepared and received with unanimity, though there was insufficient time for proper discussion. This was especially true of the reports of the Ministerial Education Society, now incorporated, the committee on education, and that on benevolence. It will be necessary hereafter to plan for more time for the hearing and discussion of these reports. The attendance, which was so large at other sessions of the convention, ran down more than half for the closing session on Wednesday forenoon. This was the greatest flaw in the convention. The last action of the convention was the adoption, by unanimous vote, of a resolution asking the churches in the state, in co-operation with our missionary convention, to appoint one delegate to conventions hereafter, and instruct him to remain until the final adjournment, however many other members may desire to attend. If the churches will carry out this request of the convention we will no longer be compelled to dispatch important business with a mere remnant of the convention. The addresses at the last session and the committee reports were among the most important in the whole convention, and it was a great injustice to these interests that only a fragment of the convention remained to consider them.

The Bible studies at these conventions, conducted by Prof. R. G. Sears, Christian University; Dean W. J. Lhamon, Missouri Bible College, and Prof. Albert Buxton, Christian University, were thoughtful and instructive. We suggest, however, that instead of these Bible lectures hereafter an hour be devoted to devotional exercises in which all the delegates present, who may desire to do so, shall have liberty and opportunity to participate. This one feature was lacking in the Hannibal convention.

We have seldom heard an abler series of stirring addresses than those given at Hannibal. Among the longer addresses we can not refrain from mentioning those of Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, vice pres. of the C. W. B. M.; Mrs. Helen E. Moses, corresponding secretary; George H. Combs, of Kansas City; W. J. Wright, acting corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society; Prof. C. M. Sharpe, Missouri Bible College; J. H. Bryan, State Bible school superintendent of Iowa; C. H. Winders, pastor of the Christian Church, Columbia; the memorial address by W. T. Moore, of Columbia; that on World-wide Evangelism, by S. J. Corey, and, of course, G. W. Muckley on Church Extension. There were brilliant short addresses that captivated the audience; one of the most striking was by by Ralph Lozier, on "Educational Needs."

The communion service on Sunday afternoon at which a very appropriate sermon was delivered by Bro. E. J. Lampton, of Louisiana, and which was presided over by S. B. Moore, of St. Louis, was an inspiring and impressive service. Our ministers occupied the pulpits of the Protestant churches generally in the city, and we heard good reports from all these churches.

The splendid weather, the large attendance, the unstinted hospitality of the Hannibal people, regardless of church lines, and the spirit of unity and optimism which prevailed, made this last Missouri convention one of the very brightest and best in its whole history, and we believe marks an era of larger things for the brotherhood of Disciples in this state.

Convention Notes.

Levi Marshall, pastor of the Hannibal church, showed himself a general in dispensing hospitality and good cheer.

A representative of the Christian Publishing Company, who was present, made the interesting discovery that nearly every soul who attended the convention was a subscriber to The Christian-Evangelist.

Many of the delegates remained to make a steamboat excursion down the river, which was the closing feature of the visit. Most of them, however, hastened homeward when the final adjournment was reached.

It was beautiful to see how the churches and people of the city of Hannibal federated in entertaining the convention and in providing for its wants. The fact is, we could not have held such a convention in Hannibal without such federation.

The music of the convention, led by the Hannibal choir, was very inspiring. The duets sung by Clarence E. Wagner, pastor of the Christian Church at Shelbyville, Mo., and Charles H. Altheide, chorus leader and soloist, of Bloomfield, Ia., were highly appreciated and enthusiastically encored by the convention.

Hannibal never looked more beautiful, sitting like a queen on the throne of her green hills which overlook the Mississippi, than she did last week while throwing her gates wide open to the throngs of Christian workers. It has grown to be a city of eighteen or twenty thousand population, and is noted for its lovely palatial homes.

Perhaps the most enthusiastic moment in the convention was when a resolution was offered endorsing the law-enforcement policy of Governor Folk, calling attention to the declared purpose of the Wholesale and Retail Liquor Dealers' Association to defeat members for the next Legislature who would not vote for their interests, and pledging the members of the convention to support only such men as would favor the policy of enforcing the law to the utmost limit against that common foe of the state and of the church—the American saloon. After long applause it was adopted by unanimous rising vote.

Notes and Comments.

In the report of the Michigan state convention, which will be found elsewhere, it will be seen that a motion was adopted asking for the suspension of the discussion on the subject of federation. In so far as this motion expresses the feeling that that subject has had sufficient treatment for the present, and that it has had altogether too much of a certain kind of treatment, we are in hearty sympathy with it. Several weeks ago we expressed the view that the discussion had run its natural course, and we have only dealt with the matter since in answer to certain pressing questions which have come to us, except in our series of historical studies on the subject of Christian union where we are dealing with the matter not controversially, but simply as a matter of history, and pointing out its relation to the general subject of Christian union. We believe, in the present state of the public mind, a little quiet thinking and pondering, with more praying and less writing, would prove most profitable to the cause we all love and are seeking to advance. In saying this, however, we must remind the brethren not only of Michigan but of the whole country, that editors do not have it in their power to determine what questions shall arise for discussion. These grow out of the movements of current history, and when they come, if they have an important bearing on the welfare of Christianity and the Church, they must be met in a proper Christian spirit. This is what we have tried to do with this subject of federation, and how far we have succeeded or failed we must leave our readers to decide. We hope our correspondents who are still writing upon this subject will not insist on the continuation of the discussion which we are sure the majority of the brethren feel has been carried on a sufficient length of time.

Editor's Easy Chair.

It would be a great surprise to most of our readers to know the character of some of the letters which we receive, and chiefly, we regret to say, from preachers. These letters are usually personal and deplore the Editor's departure from the faith, and exhort him, if it be not too late, to repent and return to the old paths! So far from exciting any feeling of anger, these letters help to keep us humble. They are generally based on one assumption which, if granted, everything else would inevitably follow, namely: that the judgment of their authors is perfect, and constitutes a just standard of measurement. Not that they are conscious of any such assumption; they have unconsciously identified their conclusions with the absolute truth. Their reasoning does not betray the slightest suspicion that their judgment may be fallible and their conclusions erroneous. That has never dawned upon them as a possibility. They could not see the slightest humor in Cromwell's exhortation to the Scotch elders to try to believe in the possibility of their having made a mistake! Of course, if one can dwell contentedly in this sort of an Eden, it would seem a pity to disturb his self-complacency. Now, editors are fallible like other people, and it is perfectly proper for readers to point out to them, in the proper way, either privately or for publication, their mistakes, and the average editor, we dare say, is glad to have such criticism, when it is seasoned with grace and with a proper degree of humility; but when a critic assumes the attributes of infallibility, immutability, and impeccability, the criticism ceases to be profitable, except purely as a psychological study.

Among other reproaches which come to the Easy Chair is that of being a "mystic." With a certain class of writers mysticism is the red flag that excites all their pugilistic qualities. That Jesus and John and Paul, and many of the greatest saints of history, were mystics, in the same sense in which these critics denounce mysticism, has probably never occurred to them. When Jesus prayed "that they may all be one; even as Thou, Father, art in me and I in Thee that they also may be in us," he was speaking the language of a mystic; that is to say, he was not speaking in terms of logic, but in terms of intuition, or the direct consciousness of God. When John said, speaking to Christians, "And as for you, the anointing which ye received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any one teach you; but as his anointing teacheth you concerning all things, and is true, and is no lie, and even as it taught you, ye abide in him," he was speaking the language of what would now be termed "mysticism." Should any one say to-day, "I have been crucified with Christ, and it is no longer I that lives, but Christ liveth in me," he would be charged with being a "mystic." And yet, none of these were mystics in the sense of being mere dreamers, dwelling in the cloud-land of mystery; they were intensely practical, but the strength with which they wrought the practical work of life came from their vision of God, and from their dwelling in the atmosphere of his presence. They had these deeper experiences of fellowship with God, and, speaking from the depths of their own experiences, their language seems to men of a different temperament and of a different experience, as the language of mysticism.

Speaking of temperaments, we might paraphrase the language of Paul by saying that all temperaments are not the same temperament. There is the intuitive, or poetical, temperament, and there is the prosaic, or matter-of-fact, temperament; there is the nervous-sanguine temperament, and the phlegmatic temperament. It is a great fallacy to suppose that people possessing these different temperaments will have exactly the same sort of religious experiences. It is equally impossible that they should see truth in exactly the same light, giving equal emphasis to its different aspects. Here is a constant cause of offense to unthinking and unreflective people. They seem to expect that every one will see the truth from the same angle as that from which they see it, and will express it in about the same language. Any departure from this seems to them error. And yet nothing is plainer than that this variety of temperament, of experience, and of ways of looking at truth, exists in the New Testament itself. It would have been impossible for Paul and James, for instance, to have seen the same truths in the same way, and to have given the same sort of expression to these truths. So of other inspired writers, each of whom uttered the truth as he saw it, and while there is an underlying unity in their utterances, there is variety also, and the Bible is a richer book than it could possibly have been if it had all been written by one man, or by men of the same temperament. A proper appreciation of this fact would guarantee greater freedom to men in uttering the truth as they see it, and our current religious literature would be richer and fuller if we had this originality of utterance, instead of an effort to conform our expression of truth to some conventional standard of orthodoxy.

What is more attractive and inspiring than a real live, wide-awake, up-to-date, enthusiastic church, under the leadership of a minister, who, forgetful of self, seeks only to honor his Master and advance his kingdom! Such a church is that at Paris, Ill., and such a pastor is Finis Idleman. It was the privilege of the Editor to be with this earnest, working church on Lord's day morning last, and to breathe the electric atmosphere of its zeal and consecration. The occasion was the closing of the six months' friendly contest with the Christian Church at Jacksonville, Ill., in Sunday-school attendance and contributions. The attendance at Paris on Sunday morning last was 924, and the contribution was $151. The average attendance for the six months was 603, and the average contribution something over $39. Jacksonville, at last accounts, was a little ahead on the contributions, but Paris led in the attendance. The great Sunday-school was easily transformed into the morning preaching service, and the Editor addressed an audience that crowded and packed every corner and gallery of their splendid building. The church finds itself confronting a problem created by its own life and growth, namely: that of a larger building in which to do its work. We have never seen a church more united and zealous for its preacher, than is the Paris church for its young and efficient pastor, who has led them to such a victory. Their unity is the secret of their success. They will solve this problem of more room as they have solved other problems. Paris is a beautiful little city noted for its fine churches, its well-paved streets, overarched with shade trees, and the rich farming country surrounding it. It is also the home and headquarters of "The Shepherd Treatment Company," for the cure of whiskey, morphine and other drug habits, which is destined to make the place as widely known as the "Keeley Cure" has made the town of Dwight, in the same state. We greatly enjoyed this brief visit to Paris, and with this great Sunday-school under the superintendency of Brother Brown and this live church under the leadership of Brother Idleman. Such work as the Paris church is doing, if general, would bring us to the Centennial mark with flying colors.

The Easy Chair readers have already seen the premonitory symptoms of a change of base for the Easy Chair during the summer months. They will not be surprised, therefore, if, from and after this date, the musings and reflections of this department will have in them something of the odor of the pine woods, the sound of breaking waves, and the freshness of breezes that sweep landward across vast stretches of an inland sea. This change of habitat for the summer months we have found by experience to be not only conducive to health but quite consistent with the carrying forward of the work which no editor ever completely lays aside until he lays all his burdens down. If any of our readers should desire to swing in a hammock in the shade of Pentwater pines and hemlocks, during the heated term, we would be glad to welcome them. If we may be able to contribute, in any small way, to the enjoyment of those who may be so situated that they can not leave home for the summer, by any thought or sentiment which we may be able to convey from our rural retreat, the Easy Chair will be only too glad to contribute in this way to the summer enjoyment of its readers. For, after all, the chief rest and the greatest refreshment of spirit any one can find, is to be at peace with God and his brother-man, while seeking to honor the one and help the other. The summer ought to bring this boon to all of us, whether in the city or in the country—the opportunity for repose of mind, for quietness of spirit, and for meditation on things of enduring reality. That such opportunity may come to all our readers during the summer months is the sincere wish of the Editor.

CHAPTER VI.

Experiences of Brother Piano-Tuner.

Though Brother Schoolmaster says in his notes that he was never more calm in his life than he was at the close of Brother Lawyer's review of his testimony, he admits that he got upon his feet hurriedly and began:

"Brethren, if this is to be the spirit and style——."

"Hereafter," interrupted Bro. J. B., "witnesses will not be allowed to review the reviewer. If I understand the purpose of these discussions they are disciplinary in their character, designedly so. While we, as Protestants, do not believe in penance and other works of supererogation, they are not in themselves essentially bad if suffered voluntarily and accepted in a becoming spirit of meekness. It is not in the nature of chastisement to be joyous, in the present, yet afterwards it may yield peaceable fruits of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby. If the janitor will now accompany me to the grocery across the street this association will be refreshed with a couple of watermelons at my expense; after which we will be adjourned until the usual hour to-morrow, when we shall expect to hear from Brother Piano-Tuner."

The association met, pursuant to adjournment, at the hour named, and Brother Piano-Tuner took the stand. The witness was about 27 years old. He was tall, slender, with large magnetic eyes, slim white hands and thick, curling, dark hair. He wore no beard, and his skin had that rather pallid look sometimes observable in dark people. He said:

"My excuse for leaving the pulpit may not be a valid one, but it has the advantage of being old, historical, almost scriptural: I married a wife."

"Gentermens!" exclaimed the janitor.

"That is it, brethren. As a certain other dark-complexioned gentleman once remarked, the very head and front of my offending hath this extent, no more."

"De Lawd grant!" said the janitor, who appeared to consider the quotation as something exalted and Biblical, deserving the endorsement of all devout people.

"Some of you know something of my work, and I think you will bear me out when I say I was not a failure. When I was called to the work at Spinsterview, I felt the initiation to enter a field of such importance was one of which I had a right to be proud; and I humbly hoped and prayed I might be found equal to the undertaking. The fact that I stayed there three years and had been called for the fourth is surely a circumstance in my favor, proving that the people thought well of me—too well, alas, some of them, I fear. Though I was an unmarried man; though I had previously been told that the lot of the unmarried preacher is generally a most unhappy lot; though all the best authorities advise early marriage for us; I was nevertheless fairly prosperous and happy at Spinsterview for three whole years, and part of the fourth.

"My position, socially, seemed to be all that I could desire. The people appeared to be rather enthusiastic about my work, and they said enough kind and flattering things to turn a head less well balanced than mine. Yet, curiously enough, my friends even there were constantly telling me I ought to get married.

"For example, Sister Matem, wife of the president of our board, more than once discussed that matter with me. Nobody ever treated me with more kindness than this lady, her husband and her four daughters. At the very beginning of my work she cordially told me that her house would always be open to me. Her carriage was placed at my disposal whenever I needed it. That whole family entered upon all of my schemes of church work with a zeal and enthusiasm which was most gratifying. I never saw any young lady more zealous of good works than Miss Robina, the eldest daughter. She was chairman of the sick committee, and hardly a week passed when she did not bring the family carriage to take me to the bedside of some poor sufferer of whose afflictions I might never have heard but for her. Time and time again did Mrs. Matem advise me to get married.

"'A minister's power for good,' she said to me once, 'is doubled, if not trebled, when he is mated with a good, religious wife brought up in a church-going family, heart and soul interested in her husband's work.' Laughingly and blushingly, I put the advice aside, declaring I was determined to live and die a bachelor.

"Another home where I was often most cordially entertained, was that of Sister Conscience Kleer, widow of the late Darby Kleer. Bereft of her husband when she was only 20, she had since devoted her time and means, in liberal measure, to the church. She soon formed, I know not how or why, a high opinion of my business ability, and she frequently consulted me about the management of her large estate. She would often tell me that it was a great comfort to her to have a pastor to whom she could talk freely of her business affairs. Then, too, she was a woman who gave a great deal of thought to religious questions. If any point of doctrine troubled her she could never be satisfied until it was cleared up; and I was often of service to her in such matters. About the time I first met her she had become much concerned about the wonderful beasts described in the thirteenth chapter of Revelations, and she invited me to call and explain to her what those awful creatures might signify; and when I had done so, fully and clearly, she could hardly find words to express her gratitude: she said that she should always know, thereafter, where to turn for help when anything perplexed her. She, also, told me I ought to marry, and her arguments were much the same as those of Sister Matem.

"'My ideal for a preacher's wife,' she wisely said, 'is a staid, womanly woman, neither too young nor too old. If she is a woman who has experience in household affairs, so much the better; for a minister's time is taken up with spiritual matters and the affairs of his congregation, so that he may easily come to grief, financially, if his wife has neither business capacity nor business experience.'

"To Mrs. Kleer, as to Mrs. Matem, I blushingly declared I was resolved to live and die a bachelor.

"Our organist, Miss Cecelia Throstle, was a very sweet, refined, cultivated woman of about my own age, or, possibly, a little older. She was the daughter of Deacon Wood Throstle, chorister and leading tenor of our choir. I boarded at the home of Brother Throstle; and I had not been there long before I discovered that Miss Cecelia and I possessed many tastes in common. Always, in the matter of church decorations, in the arrangement of booths for bazars, in chrysanthemum or other floral shows, we agreed perfectly. We both loved the lighter literature of our language, especially the productions of the minor poets, and many a pleasant evening have we spent reading, by turns, 'Lucile,' 'Lalla Rookh,' 'Maurine' and 'Loves of the Angels.' Many a time did this dear girl tell me that I was the only gentleman she had ever met who seemed to be able to understand her—who knew how to sympathize with her tastes, feelings, yearnings, aspirations. She, too, speaking, as she said, with the freedom of an elder sister, told me I ought to marry, her arguments being much the same as those used by Mrs. Matem and Mrs. Kleer. She added, however, that a man could make no more fatal mistake than to marry a woman who was not his equal mentally.

"An ideal wife for a preacher, she thought, must be a woman who stands almost, if not quite, on the same intellectual level with himself; a woman with a mind able to appreciate his best work, and with a heart capable of sympathizing with his higher mental aspirations; a woman who, being neither a vain and silly bread-and-butter Miss, nor yet very much, if any, his senior in years, fully matured in mind and body, will be his equal and companion: so accompanied on life's journey, a man of my abilities, with my personal advantages, should be able to win a high place in his chosen profession. All that was so sane and reasonable that I could not but agree with her; yet to her, as to the others, I made the blushing disclaimer of any intent to marry, committing myself firmly to the bachelor state.

"You must not suppose, brethren, that in thus committing myself to perpetual bachelorhood, in my talks with these dear people, I was at all insincere. I really did not believe at that time that Miss Martha Ingle-

Some of My Likings---Why I Like England

By William Durban

Having paid my sincere respects to the greatest daughter of the "Mother of Empires" in my last contribution to this paper, I may now be permitted to do like homage to the mother herself. Of course, like all Englishmen, I am in the habit of using the term "England" in an inclusive sense, applying it to the whole United Kingdom, simply for convenience, not in any disparagement of Scotland or Wales or Ireland. My American friends talk just as loosely, also, for mere convenience, for they talk of "America" when they refer only to the United States, without intending thereby any kind of offence to Canada or Mexico.

A Law-Abiding Land.

In no country is there manifested so true a veneration for law, or so profound a regard for social order. Here England leads the way. No kind of licence is smiled upon by the community at large. I ascribe this lack of lawlessness to the following causes. In the first place, the British people have subjected their historic evolution to the influence of the Bible. The Word of God is the real political text-book of the empire. It was a supreme blessing for the nation that it achieved a religious reformation before it passed through a political revolution. France rejected the reformation, so when it tried revolution it was cursed by the lack of a higher control of popular passion. Russia fails because she has known no spiritual change from superstition to real Christianity. In the second place, our insularity in the geographical sense has enabled successive generations to work out their own political and sociological salvation without the fatal hindrance of foreign interference. For close on a thousand years no foreigner has successfully invaded the soil of the nited Kingdom. And the British people have also failed whenever they sought to gain a foothold on the Continent. They were driven out of France by Joan of Arc. They did not keep their grip on Hanover. England and its people stand alone in Europe. My country is entangled by no Continental alliances. She has not forgotten the terrible blunder of Lord Palmerston when as premier he permitted Louis Napoleon to drag her into the appalling Crimean war. It is this independence of her neighbors, all either enslaved by militarism or debased by popery, or else, as in the case of the little nations like Denmark or Holland, too insignificant for great polity, which has given dignity to the British mind and has induced the passion for law and order. The influence of a strong Puritanism has done the rest. Anarchism, Communism, Socialism, have no show at all within the borders of the United Kingdom.

The Land of Ideal Homes.

Americans will specially sympathize with my sentiment at this point. "Home, Sweet Home," the most pathetic of songs, was written by a homeless American. That immortal little lyric is sung constantly everywhere in England. The British and American people alone have in their language the magic word "home." Other races have to employ phrases of circumlocution if they would come near the idea. England made the real home and America adopted it. But if I may be permitted to say so, here England leads the way. For she conserves above all nations of the earth the sanctity of the marriage bond. The British people know that easy loosening of the matrimonial bond can only result in dislocating all other ties in the social fabric, ethical, religious and political. The keen sense of the American people will lead them ere long to institute some national reform of their marriage laws. It must be so. On this topic I need not further dwell. But I think that the solid domestic conservatism of my nation may be claimed as an inestimable blessing.

Archaic Enchantments.

I greatly admire the delight which American visitors to England display wherever they look on the relics of the past. For these monumental remains are not only unspeakably beautiful, but they glorify the character of the ancestors of our race. America owes its greatness in largest measure to the old makers of England. Those old Vikings, Saxons, Norsemen, Danes and Celts, who all blended into the nationality that constitutes Anglo-Saxondom, have left priceless memorials. Can anything be more eloquent as a volume in stone of many pages than such a structure as the parish church at Minster, in Kent, between Canterbury and Margate? There, in the grand old sanctuary where worship is still daily carried on, and has been for nearly 1,500 years, we have a Roman foundation of the building; a Saxon tower; also a Norman tower; an Early English nave; and Mediaeval isles, with the leper squint-holes and many other curious reminders of various ages. And England is dotted with such historic evidences. Our magnificent ancient Cathedrals seem to say that the men who built them really believed something, and believed it without a shade of doubt. They were actuated by the triple faith that alone can make a great nation—faith in God, faith in man, faith in work.

The Land of Perpetual Calm.

Korea has been called "The Land of the Morning Calm." My England might be called "The Land of Everlasting Calm." For in our snug little island we have no nerve-shocking occurrences. Earthquakes do not trouble our archipelago. No cyclone has ever raged about our shores. Nature with us kindly mitigates all her severities. Our climate only plays gently at winter. We have a little frost, a little ice, a little snow, a little east wind, a little lightning and thunder—just enough of these to do us good. An American lady said to me, "I love your English summers; they are simply perfect." This moderation in nature is reflected in the character of the people. We are at one and the same time moderately conservative and moderately radical. Our climate is often ridiculed as consisting only of mere "samples." But Americans who have resided long in Britain declare that in that country you can work longer hours a day all through the year with comfort and pleasure than is possible anywhere else on earth. I believe that verdict. I usually work when at home in England from early in the morning—often very early indeed—until a late hour at night, yet I have rarely felt the slightest sensation of fatigue. We are subject to no violent social or political convulsions. Our people never riot. Nobody carries firearms or any other weapons. We are always agitating for reform and progress, but the changes are effected gradually and steadily, and the results are solid. For this again we are subjected to derision in many quarters. Yet I understand that a navigable river is more useful, with its calm, deep current, than a cataract or a cascade, however sublime may be the rush and roar of such waters.

Where Everything is Genuine.

We may be accounted too slow. Old countries are apt to lag. But the Britisher genuinely admires American "go" and "hustle." He never fails to compliment his younger brother on his splendid aggressiveness. Yet he himself is incorrigibly devoted to thoroughness. This may, of course, be carried beyond the line of actual utility, and my observations of life on both sides of the Atlantic have convinced me that it is so. After all, however, I think that the scrupulous effort of my countrymen to do everything efficiently has many advantages. The two countries are thus helping each other by what is better done in each. Everywhere in Britain and in America I notice one exceedingly suggestive custom. It is the habit of the American tradesman constantly to tempt his customers to purchase foreign goods, especially British commodities, in preference to American articles. I constantly hear in American stores the commendatory phrase, "It is imported." This in an extraordinary reflection, to say the least, on the persistent system of protection and high tariff. But in my country I just as uniformly hear it said by way of emphasizing the merit of some article of trade, "It is English, you know." That is enough. The quality is stamped instantly as superior. Whence comes this curious differentiation of preferences? Surely it is owing to the worldwide recognition of genuineness in British-made goods. The Englishman is possessed of a perfect passion for sincerity. An American who had traveled very extensively said to me, "There is one thing about the English I have long profoundly admired. It is their universal and absolute love of fair play." Shams, fakes, adulteration of food are unknown in England. And good Americans gladly say so.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

We shall leave Jerusalem with regret. It has become every day more fascinating. Sunday, March 18, we met in an "upper room" to break bread. It was a sweet and holy service. Here where our Lord instituted the supper it seemed specially fitting that the Disciples should assemble to commemorate his sufferings and death. A number of our brethren of other churches met with us. L. L. Carpenter, our patriarch, presided; and it is safe to say no more touching or apostolic service was held that day in the Holy City. It was a great privilege to share in it, and the pompous ceremonies of the Lenten season at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, with their processions under Turkish escort, and the long files of Turkish soldiers to maintain order, and keep the rival Christians from biting and devouring one another, seemed at least for us a poor representation of the Christian religion beside it.

I have been permitted to see something of the home life of the people, which interested me greatly. We were entertained in one of the best of the Christian homes, and also in a Moslem home. One of my friends in Washington is a converted Moslem, and a Moslem friend of his, informed of my coming to Jerusalem, took me to his house, where I was graciously and hospitably treated. There I met the widowed mother of the Christian young man, and his sisters and brothers, all Moslems. The children, fourteen in number, specially interested me, little Amneh and Mahmoot, Kaleel, Zarifa and Ashae, Fatima and Ayeshah. I knew all the names long ago from the Arabian Nights, and the bright little ones sat on cushions in the form of a crescent at my feet and watched and wondered and listened just like American little folks if some Turkish Pasha should enter their homes; and when the delicious tea, and such toothsome cakes as I never ate before, were served, and I ate my share and said, "Give the cakes to the children," they looked as grateful and delighted as I used to be when at the same period of my earthly career. Of course they all talked Arabic, and I used the interpreter; but we had a good time together, and through a severe storm I left the Mount and through Stephen's Gate returned to the city. The widow's name was "Howah," Eve. She appealed to me to persuade her son, who has been four years absent, to return to her, saying in Oriental speech that she would kiss my feet and would then be ready to depart in peace.

More stately and elegant was the home of Mr. Jarmal, the Christian, where I also enjoyed most delightful hospitality and where the fragrant tea and sweets were served. People come to Jerusalem and see the beggars and lepers, the throngs of the unwashed on David and Damascus streets, the rags and filth of the Wailing Place, and the gabble of Arabs and dickering of traders in souvenirs and say "That is Jerusalem the golden!" and leave in disgust. The Holy City has vastly more for the thoughtful student than any city it has ever been my privilege to see. Our hotel here was the home of all distinguished visitors. Chinese Gordon occupied my room for a year, and the next was Gen. Grant's, while Lew Wallace's was three doors away. It is a mistake to think, however, he wrote "Ben Hur" when in this country, as that was done when he lived in Mexico.

Then, about Jerusalem there is an inexhaustible source of instruction and profit. We took the famous route from Jerusalem to Jericho, where a certain man fell among thieves. The way is past Gethsemane and Olivet to Bethany. Bethany, the former home of Lazarus and his sisters, is a ruined and repulsive place, and there is no foundation for the claims for the tomb and the house of our Lord's friends; yet here is the spot, no doubt. These waste places were once the habitation of the old Bethany people. The whole way to Jericho is through the Judean desert, with billowy hills and great ravines and noble glimpses of faraway scenes like the Dead Sea and the Jordan valley and the distant gray mountains of Moab, with Pisgah and Nebo and the rest. From Olivet down it is a descent of 4,000 feet, with all this glorious panorama spread out like a map at our feet. The only spring along the road is called the "Apostles' Spring," and no doubt Jesus and his disciples often drank there. "The Good Samaritan Inn" is a stopping place for rest. It looks to be the location of the parable. Farther on we see the brook Cherith and the rocky ravine would be an ideal hiding place for the prophet, and one sees ravens flying about which make the picture more realistic. A Greek monastery is built for apostate priests on the sheer precipice where Elijah is supposed to have been fed, the very acme of inaccessibility and utter desolation. A precipitous mountain near by is called the Mount of our Lord's Temptation. All along the solitary places are caves, the former resort of hermits and anchorites.

About six miles from the Jordan is ancient Jericho, marked by a mound, and issuing from it Elisha's fountain, whose waters are "sweet to this day." Explorations show traces of the old walls. The old city was "The City of Palms," and Josephus called this "the fattest of Judea," but to-day there is not a single palm. The plain of the Jordan is here twelve miles wide. The heat of the valley is great, often reaching 100 degrees in July and August. We stopped in modern Jericho and spent the night at what might be termed "The Hotel des Fleas." All night the annoying insects vexed us, and we laid awake and listened to the bark of the jackals and contended with the plague of the pulex irritans. There are several little hotels, but the town is a group of miserable hovels and wretched cut-throat looking Bedouins. The people are notorious thieves, and it was not a comfortable night in such a village, where the dogs would bark, and then the jackals fiercely answer, the donkies bray piteously and the fleas ceaselessly get in their work upon the wearied pilgrim. Say to your worst enemy: "Go to Jericho!" if you are not a Christian.

Jordan and the Dead Sea are near by. The sea is a desolate place. We look across its dreary waste of waters to the purple mountains of Moab and the approach to the sea is like going to the bottom of an abyss. It seems "a great gulf fixed" between the lofty table-lands east and west. The sea is forty-seven miles long and from three to nine in width; its greatest depth is 1,310 feet, and its surface is 1,300 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. Seven per cent of the water is salt. It has a bitter taste, due to the large amount of chloride of magnesium, and an oily feeling, due to the chloride of calcium held in solution. No living thing is found in its

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE

Agrees With Him About Food.

A trained nurse says: "In the practice of my profession I have found so many points in favor of Grape-Nuts food that I unhesitatingly recommend it to all my patients.

"It is delicate and pleasing to the palate (an essential in food for the sick) and can be adapted to all ages, being softened with milk or cream for babies or the aged when deficiency of teeth renders mastication impossible. For fever patients or those of liquid diet I find Grape-Nuts and albumen water very nourishing and refreshing. This recipe is my own idea and is made as follows: Soak a teaspoonful of Grape-Nuts in a glass of water for an hour, strain and serve with the beaten white of an egg and a spoonful of fruit juice or flavoring. This affords a great deal of nourishment that even the weakest stomach can assimilate without any distress.

"My husband is a physician and he uses Grape-Nuts himself and orders it many times for his patients.

"Personally I regard a dish of Grape-Nuts with fresh or stewed fruit as the ideal breakfast for any one—well or sick." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

In any case of stomach trouble, nervous prostration or brain fag, a 10 days trial of Grape-Nuts will work wonders toward nourishing and rebuilding, and in this way ending the trouble. "There's a reason" and trial proves.

What the Brethren are Saying and Doing

By B. B. TYLER

In The Christian-Evangelist of May 31 I promised to give an account of a great missionary conference held in Denver, May 22-24; but the time has so far passed that now it is too late to say all that I had in my mind to say concerning this great assembly. The meeting was called "The Rocky Mountain Missionary Convention." It included the states of Colorado, Wyoming and Utah, and the territories of Arizona and New Mexico. This was a missionary convention of those Christians called Methodists, and residing in the regions defined. There were about 800 delegates in attendance. "The Whole World for Christ" would have been an appropriate motto. No person seemed to know or care anything about John Wesley and Methodism. The making known of the Christ to the nations of the earth and the spread of Christianity among the sons of men was the one theme. Much was said about confessing Christ and being baptized. One person only incidentally in an address revealed, by the use of a single word, an imperfect knowledge of what Christian baptism is. The ordinance, when spoken of, was invariably placed in its proper position. But the spirit of this great gathering was the feature in which I was most interested. It was thoroughly and intensely Christian. It was Christian in its purpose, in its earnestness and its catholicity. The following familiar words, in large letters, were before the assembly morning, noon and night:

> "Let every kindred, every tribe,
> On this terrestrial ball,
> To Him all majesty ascribe,
> And crown Him Lord of all."

The convention opened, with Bishop Warren in the chair, and the first hymn was "Come, Thou Almighty King."

One of the first addresses, if not the first, was given by Bishop Foss on "The Popularity of Jesus." Now and again, of course, something was said about the Christian use of money. Some one suggested that the words, in one of our hymns, "I will go where you want me to go, dear Lord," should be amended so as to read, "I will pay as you want me to pay, dear Lord."

The address by Dr. A. B. Leonard on "The Way of the Lord Prepared" was one of the most thrilling speeches I ever heard. He indicated in a masterful manner, and with consummate skill, the movements of divine Providence during the last one hundred years looking toward the evangelization of the whole creation and the ultimate enthronement of the Christ as the supreme Lord over all. The last point was the increasing unity and union among those who wear the name of Christ. He referred to the great conference in New York last November as one of the signs of this growing unity among the disciples of Christ. Dr. Leonard did not use the word "co-operation." I think I have noticed that some of the brethren see a marked difference between "co-operation" and "federation." Dr. Leonard sees no difference; with him "federation" and "co-operation" mean the same thing. This use of the word "co-operation," where often the word "federation" is used, was interesting to me because Dr. Leonard, I believe, was active in working up "The Inter-Church Conference on Federation."

I can not, in this letter, say more about this "Rocky Mountain Missionary Convention" than that it was the tenth convention of the kind held by our Methodist brethren in various parts of the country within a few months.

There are 22,000 Methodist Christians in Colorado. It is proposed to enlist 11,000 as tithers. When this number of men and women, reasonably prosperous in this world's goods, enter into practical fellowship with the head of the body, our Lord Jesus Christ, something will be done which will cause those who are not observing the signs of the times to open their eyes in amazement. The word "practical" is used in this connection to describe the fellowship, because much of our so-called Christian fellowship is purely sentimental. Multitudes who call themselves Christians are in fellowship with Christ until it comes to dollars and dimes. At this point a line is drawn. In the good Book Jehovah is represented as saying, "The gold is mine and the silver is mine." The Christians of whom I speak act as if they think that here is "a spurious reading" or an unaccountable "interpolation," the number of such is legion. Nor are they all "higher critics." The time has come to teach that those who are "baptized into Christ" enter into a real, actual, practical partnership with him, and not into a fellowship that is merely sentimental.

But we are moving in the right direction. The Central Christian Church Bible school on Children's day contributed $643 to missions. We are moving. We are not standing still. The Central Christian Church in Denver, under the pastoral care of W. Bayard Craig, is not a stationary institution. See how this church is growing in the grace of giving. Three years ago the contribution to the cause of missions the first Lord's day in June was $20; two years ago it was $200; one year ago it was $258, and this year $643. A part of this money will go to the foreign field and a part will be used in the homeland. This is the largest offering to the cause of missions ever made through a Sunday-school in the state of Colorado. How was it done? Dr. Perrin, the superintendent of the Sunday-school, will tell how it was done in The Christian-Evangelist.

The Highlands Christian Church held its annual meeting June 1. J. E. Pickett is the pastor and teacher of this congregation. There is now a cozy building, well located, with an indebtedness of only $2,000; the actual membership of the church is 277. Since the beginning of Brother Pickett's pastorate 278 persons have united with the church. Look at these figures and learn from them what a moving population we have in "The Queen City of the Plains." There was a net gain in the membership of the church last year of fourteen. During the last five years the Highlands Church has collected and disbursed $13,760. This is a remarkable record, under the circumstances, and full of encouragement. Year by year since the beginning of the present pastorate, the church has gained. The receipts and disbursements last year amounted to $4,305. In the midst of its building enterprise this congregation contributed to missions and benevolences $260. But better than everything else there has been a growth of character into the likeness of the Christ.

KNOWS NOW

Doctor Was Fooled by His Own Case for a Time.

It's easy to understand how ordinary people get fooled by coffee when doctors themselves sometimes forget the facts.

A physician speaks of his own experience:

"I had used coffee for years and really did not exactly believe it was injuring me, although I had palpitation of the heart every day.

"Finally one day a severe and almost fatal attack of heart trouble frightened me and I gave up both tea and coffee, using Postum instead, and since that time I have had absolutely no heart palpitation except on one or two occasions when I tried a small quantity of coffee, which caused severe irritation and proved to me I must let it alone.

"When we began using Postum it seemed weak—that was because we did not make it according to directions—but now we put a little bit of butter in the pot when boiling and allow the Postum to boil full 15 minutes, which gives it the proper rich flavor and the deep brown color.

"I have advised a great many of my friends and patients to leave off coffee and drink Postum; in fact, I daily give this advice." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Many thousands of physicians use Postum in place of tea and coffee in their own homes and prescribe it to patients. "Theres' a reason."

The Missouri State Convention

The large auditorium of the Christian Church at Hannibal, Mo., as well as the Sunday-school room, were filled to overflowing when the Christian Woman's Board of Missions of Missouri opened the series of conventions that are now grouped under the one annual state meeting. The registration on the first day was the largest in many years and was but the forecast of the "largest on record" convention. The actual registration during the different periods of the convention amounted in the aggregate to 1,041, which is perhaps double the number ever registered before, and there were those in attendance who did not register. Instead of having the books in a back room the Hannibal committee stationed ladies at the doors of the church, and it was thus an easy matter to obtain the signatures of the out-of-town delegates.

C. W. B. M. Session.

Mrs. H. A. Denton, of Maryville, who is the state president, reviewed in an admirably clean-cut paper the progress of the organization. During the past year the aim had been to raise the membership to 4,600 women. The actual number reached was 4,954. They aimed to raise $2,800, but exceeded this amount by $1,900. The welcome to Hannibal was given by Mrs. Edward Drescher, who performed that same pleasant duty twenty-three years ago, when the state convention met at Hannibal. At that time the society was in its infancy, and Mrs. Drescher is one of three charter members left who were enjoying the privilege of attending this last convention. After a response by Mrs. Bantz, the state secretary, there was a recitation by Miss Anna F. Moore, of Palmyra, which was followed by a solo by Mrs. John Mitchell, of New York. Mrs. Anna Atwater, vice president of the national organization, made the speech of the evening, which was a review of the national work and the aspirations which the society has for the future.

Mrs. J. M. Rudy conducted the devotional exercises on Saturday morning, and J. H. Hardin led the convention in prayer. After a number of short petitions Mrs. Denton delivered her annual address. Surveying the work of the year, she said the society had gotten down to bed-rock. Many who had been mere hangers-on, who paid no dues and worked only when they felt like it, were cut off from the membership. The plan of making the 5 cents per month dues for state work compulsory had proven satisfactory, and that for selecting special work had become very popular, bringing the workers in the mission fields into closer contact. There had been also a marked improvement in auxiliary programs and meetings, more preparation having been bestowed on these, with a decided added interest and a more intelligent giving as a result. The methods of conducting the business of the auxiliaries had also improved. The midwinter board meeting had proved a wise measure. In referring to matters requiring attention for the coming year, Mrs. Denton spoke of the centennial, and the fact that the national C. W. B. M. has set as its mark the raising of $110,000 over and above its regular receipts, Missouri's part being $15,000. Mrs. J. H. Garrison, Mrs. L. G. Bantz and Mrs. H. A. Denton constitute a committee, with the former having charge of all centennial correspondence, and the receiving of moneys for this purpose. The president touched upon the importance of individual gifts, and stated that, in her judgment, the time has come for the discontinuance of the state banner, and that larger use should be made of the roll of honor and certificate roll. She urged that districts should be adopted, as arranged by the brethren, and conventions held with them. Five thousand dollars ought to be the aim for special work this year, while $15,000 should be the general aim.

Listening to a veteran.

The state secretary's report was that there were 191 auxiliaries and circles at the close of last year, while now there are 208, with 4,965 members taking 2,730 "Tidings." Last year 46 auxiliaries were placed on the state honor roll, while this year 60 have won that place, though the condition is harder. The report declared that the aim of each auxiliary should be to support its own worker on the field. Union Avenue, St. Louis, which was the first living link in Missouri, will continue the support of W. J. Burner in Argentina. Sedalia has chosen Caroline Pope for their representative. Besides the work of Mrs. J. L. Moore, Mrs. A. M. Fullen, Mrs. Nell H. Glenn, Mrs. S. J. White, Mrs. J. K. Shrout and Miss Luella Duke, the secretary attended thirteen district and county conventions and spent seventy-one days in the field.

The report of Mrs. J. P. Pinkerton, treasurer, showed a balance on hand of $1,731.40. The following officers were elected: Mrs. H. A. Denton, president; Mrs. W. J. Lhamon, vice president; Mrs. L. G. Bantz, corresponding secretary; Mrs. S. J. White, recording secretary; Mrs. J. P. Pinkerton, treasurer; Miss Martha Stout, superintendent young people's department; Mrs. W. H. Richardson, E. J. Lampton and Mrs. W. D. Harrison other members of the state board.

The pledges made for state work amounted to $1,637, with more auxiliaries to be heard from.

Mrs. J. H. Garrison showed how the commemorating of days and events of importance is of very ancient origin and pointed out the value of such an event as the celebration of our centennial. She urged that the work should be pushed the first year as much as possible.

T. W. Pinkerton, who was for three years and a half at Salt Lake City, showed the deplorable condition in Utah, especially of womankind. At present there are six United States senators, he declared, hand in glove with the Mormon church. He was glad that the Christian women of Missouri had determined to make the state of Utah a special field of labor, for he regarded Mormonism as degrading and soul-destroying beyond all description.

Mrs. Helen E. Moses, the national secretary of the C. W. B. M., made a fine address on Mexico, picturing it from the time when Cortez and his followers entered the country, through 300 years of Spanish rule, and coming down to the later times when the Bibles carried in the knapsacks of our soldiers when they entered Mexico, in 1847, aided in sowing the seeds of truth which will yet make Mexico free. Mrs. Moses congratulated the women of Missouri upon their plan to build their centennial monument in Mexico's beautiful capital city. Nowhere, she said, was there a greater need for the Protestant religion than in this country adjoining our own. Mrs. Moses' address was one of the most interesting made at the convention.

At the afternoon session Miss Lura V. Thompson, secretary of the Illinois C. W. B. M., made a brief report of work in that state, following which was the report of Mrs. O. R. Miller, the state auditor of Missouri, after which certificates were given to societies enrolled on the roll of honor. Mrs. E. R. McKee, of Memphis, gave a profitable address on "Our Circles," after which Mrs. C. J. Gilman discoursed on "Pressing Forward," the gist of her advice being to forget the days in which we accomplish nothing, but to try to make the next day atone for that non-success. Reports from field workers followed.

A very interesting occasion was the convention of juniors. Miss Martha Stout, state superintendent of the young people's work, presented some statistics. H. A. Denton spoke on the "Two Aims of a Growing Service," and following his address an interesting program was rendered by some of the juniors. There are to-day 450 mission bands and the young people's department, under the name "Little Builders," has had part in the building of 17 bungalows and homes for missionaries, 5 hospitals and dispensaries, 7 orphanages, 17 schools and chapels. Warrensburg was awarded the Junior banner for the ensuing year, while Maryville circle received the C. W. B. M. banner.

Christian Endeavor.

Christian Endeavor was to the front at the evening session. In the annual report of H. A. Denton, state superintendent of Christian Endeavor, the following figures were emphasized: Active members last year, 15,035; this year, 20,000; associate members last year, 2,910; this year, 3,000; total membership last year, 17,945; this year, 23,000; number societies last year, 485; this year, 500; average number active members per society last year, 31; this year, 40; average number associate members per society last year, 6; this year, 6; total society average last year, 36; this year, 46; baptisms last year, 1,212; this year, 2,000; home missions last year, $4,001; this year, $4,500; foreign missions last year, $3,556; this year, $4,150; raised for other purposes last year, $6,062; this year, $13,000.

J. W. Henry, secretary of the Business Men's Association, was introduced and gave a brief account of Claude E. Hill, to whom the delegates voted to send the following message: "Missouri's greatest convention sends greetings to her boy in Mobile, and rejoices in his victories." After a poem by J. H. Wright, H. W. Hunter spoke on "Twenty-five Years of Christian Endeavor;" and showed himself as having a knowledge of his subject and the ability to interest his hearers. J. M. Philputt pronounced the benediction after some special music had been rendered.

The First Church of St. Louis sent to the convention between forty and fifty of its Christian Endeavorers to conduct a model Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting. This was held on Lord's day before the regular evening service at the Christian Church, and the house was crowded. The service was an interesting one, but many lost the full effect of it because of inability to hear. It would be a wise plan to have the "Model Endeavor Society" sit on the platform.

"Swamp-Eaters." Five out of the seven preachers in Southeast Missouri were present. In order in the picture they are: Edward Owers, R. H. Lampkin, S. R. Maxwell, E. J. Fenstermacher, Horace Siberell.

On Lord's day most of the pulpits in Hannibal were occupied by ministers of the Christian Church, among those preaching being W. T. Moore, J. H. Garrison, S. R. Maxwell, John L. Brandt, T. H. Capp, J. P. Pinkerton, J. M. Rudy, E. M. Richmond, C. O. McFarland, E. T. McFarland, J. I. Orrison, Harry Tucker, J. M. Bailey, Arthur N. Lindsay, L. O. Bricker, George W. Terrell, R. H. Sawyer, H. J. Corwine and J. M. Philputt. In the afternoon a union communion service was held, with S. B. Moore presiding and E. J. Lampton making the address.

The Christian Endeavor session was continued on Monday morning, when Prof. R. G. Sears, of Christian University, opened with a Bible study on John 19:19,20. Under the heading, "The Problems of the Local Society," a very interesting symposium was held, some dozen practical Endeavorers treating of as many themes in five-minute speeches. G. H. Bassett, in answering the question, "What Oversight and Assistance Should the Church Give?" said there were frequently two extremes noticed; either the church paid no attention to the Endeavor Society, or it sought to crowd it out. Floyd Stanley said that older Christians could help in the society by their presence and by words of encouragement. E. H. Williamson, who had never been a pastor in a church which did not co-operate, said that where there was not a good society there was either not a consecrated preacher or there was lack of consecration on the part of the society. A good way to insure the co-operation of the pastor was to always be present at the church services and be willing to help him. H. F. Branstetter, in answering the question, "How to Set the New Members to Work," advised a special committee of the most tactful members who should find out exactly what a new member thinks he can do best, and put him to work along that line. Miss Alice Dougherty, a bright young lady from Dexter, told of how the society there had increased its numbers by giving prominence to the social side of the young people's life, but always in the name of Christian Endeavor. Miss Dougherty said that ever since Adam ate the apple from Eve's hand man had eaten from the hand of woman. She evidently felt that "feeding the brute" has an important part even in Christian Endeavor work. L. Hulser made an earnest talk on "How to Interest Young Men in the Society," the essence of it being that it must appeal to their manhood, and not be concerned with childish and foolish things. Mrs. Guy Withers spoke on "How to Get Vital Prayer-Meetings," which could only be done by the members being consecrated and filled with the spirit of Christ. In answering the question, "How to Train Prayer-Meeting Leaders," William M. Thomas said we must go back to the great Teacher for instructions. We must be interested in the leaders; we must cling close to Christ; we must ourselves know how to lead, and we must not let the older people be a stumbling block to the younger. Miss Carr spoke on "How to Keep Committee Work at Its Best," and Miss Terry on "How to Use Christian Endeavor Literature." G. L. Powers spoke on "What New Ideals are There for the Old Committees?" giving some mottoes, as, Lookout, "Every Member an Intelligent Pledge-Taker"; Prayer-Meeting, "Every Meeting a Deeply Spiritual Meeting"; Social, "Every Member a Contributor to the Spiritual Growth of the Society"; Sunday-school, "Every Available Child"; Literature, "Good Literature Sown Broadcast"; Missionary, "A Definite Mission Study." The last question in the symposium, "How Can the President and Executive Committee Keep Things Moving?" was answered by F. H. Caldwell, who insisted on organization, which was to be brought about by the selection by the chairman of the cream of the society for special committeemen, who should make reports direct to him.

The Christian Endeavor banner for increase was awarded to the Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, which rose from 35 to 261. The Dexter Society raised the largest amount of money, $354. The First Church, St. Louis, raised the largest amount for missions, $145.50. Mindenmines reported the greatest number of baptisms, 63. New recommendations were for $300 for the coming year toward the expenses, and increased sense of honor in the matter of reports and answering correspondence, and enlargement of the plan of supporting home missions by supporting the Idaho work, and greater gifts for foreign missions by selecting one or more orphans of the Damoh orphanage.

The Bible School Period.

By the time the Bible school convention period was reached, the attendance of delegates was the largest of any one period. Many of the Christian Endeavor delegates and those who had attended the C. W. B. M. sessions apparently found it necessary to return to their homes, but as some of their trains permitted them to stay over for the early part of the Bible school convention there was a very large attendance when A. W. Kokendoffer, president of the board, rose to make his address. C. H. Winders presided. "The Rights of the Child" was the theme, and the speech was one of the best during the convention. The aroused Christian soul, declared Brother Kokendoffer, should see in the face and form of every child the possibility of a new and mighty integer for the temple of the living God. A reference to the saloon as being a curse so black and heinous as to make the blood of every devout Christian boil at its merest mention, was loudly applauded. The church and civilization of a country depend, declared the speaker, on the rights of the child being safeguarded to-day. In pleading for an enlarged vision, for a fresh study of the Word of God upon the subject of childhood, Mr. Kokendoffer, referring to our bungling ways, explained the fact that we have made any progress at all by the statement that "Jehovah can make the blunders, as well as the wrath of man to praise him." In stressing the sovereignty and fatherhood of God, he thought we had overlooked the attributes of motherhood that also belonged to him. Some of us, he thought, were too well satisfied with the work that had been done in the Bible schools, while others hasten too leisurely. In speaking of the agencies to be employed, he emphasized the work that the ministers and the official boards can do. Into their ears we must ever keep thundering that Jesus Christ said, "Feed my lambs."

J. H. Hardin, state secretary of Bible school work, presented the report of the board. It showed that despite the fact that it was a broken year, owing to no superintendent having taken up the work after W. A. Moore had resigned until J. H. Hardin was secured in September, though he could not give his full time to the work till two months later, a decided advance had been made in certain phases of the work. Instead of giving so much attention to the evangelistic field the board had taken its instructions from the recommendations of the Marshall convention, and had laid the emphasis on institute work and the organization of training classes, the results of which have been very gratifying. District conventions are to be held in unison with those planned by the state missionary society. A simultaneous rally in April was a helpful feature. Harmonious relations with interdenominational societies have been maintained, and are encouraged. The report indicated that there are some 400 congregations in the state that have no schools, and that less than half the members of our churches study the Bible. A forward step recommended was to alter this state of affairs, as well as to raise not less than $10,000 a year for advancing the work. A summary of the reports is as follows: Number days' service, 791; sermons, addresses, etc., 703; institutes held, 55; Bible schools organized, 14; churches organized, 4; rallies, mass meetings, etc., 8; protracted meetings held, 19; churches dedicated, 3; teacher-training classes organized, 29; cash raised for state Bible school work, $816.56; for local work, $152.24; for building and repairs, $659.20; for ministers' salaries, $1,564; for missions, $5; for other expenses, $95.07. Total money raised by men in the field, $3,292.07. Number of additions by baptism, 132; by letter, 139; otherwise, 34. Total additions, 305.

Among the recommendations it was suggested that a committee of five be appointed to act with the state superintendent in the selection of a course of reading for teachers; that an advisory board to represent different parts of the state be chosen to meet with the regular board of managers at least once a year; that steps be taken to give greater emphasis to the primary department. The receipts were shown to total $4,017.07, while the total expenditures were $2,710.50. The report of the primary superintendent was by no means a full one, as very little work had been done in this direction other than some correspondence. At the afternoon session Miss Bessie Merrill gave a very helpful address on "Modern Pedagogy in the Primary Room," but its effect was lost to a considerable extent by reason of the fact that the speaker could not be heard at any distance from the desk. An open parliament followed, Mrs. Duckworth, of St. Louis, emphasizing some of the points made by Miss Merrill and throwing one or two side lights on the subject.

W. J. Wright gave an outline of a speech on "What Shall We Make of Boys and Girls' Rally Day." Only 800, he said, out of 8,000 schools observe the day. A place must be given it which it has not, he declared, and we must make it educational from every standpoint. It can be applied to the religious conditions in this country, and through it the importance of city missions be emphasized, the problem of foreign immigration presented, and the religious conditions of the negroes considered. It must be made worthy of the Sunday-school and the church, and of America; of our people with their great idea, great ideal, great history, and great opportunities. Brother Wright pointed out that 50 per cent of the collections made in Missouri on children's day came back to the state for the prosecution of the work within its borders. Lastly, he said, it ought to be made one more decision day.

L. S. Cupp and L. W. McCreary were down on the program for fifteen minute speeches on "Teacher Training and How It Works." The former used a blackboard freely in telling how his church has been benefitted, interest deepened, and the attendance at the school increased from 190 to 365 in six months. The latter showed how there was a demand for the trained man and the man of culture in every walk of life. He wanted to know whether what was taught in the day schools was more important than what was taught in the Sunday-schools, and used the illustration that if a man from Mars should come to the earth we would be eager to hear him and eager to heed him, while the book dropped from heaven is too much neglected. Teacher training works, he said, in proportion to the time and devotion that is put into it.

W. W. Burks gave an excellent speech on the work of the Baraca-Philathea, an organization whose aim is, first, to find the man; second, to help the man to find himself for himself, for society and for God. Its appeal is to his social side and to the young man's desire to be associated with what is a success, and to the religious element in his make-up.

We must reserve a report of the remaining proceedings of the Bible school convention for a future issue of The Christian-Evangelist. The following elections were made: The Board—A. W. Kokendoffer, president; C. H. Winders, vice president; E. M. Smith, recording secretary; J. H. Hardin, state secretary and treasurer; J. T. Mitchell, auditor. Officers—John L. Brandt, president; L. S. Cupp, vice president; W. F. Hamann, recording secretary; Miss Jennie Burgess, assistant recording secretary; G. H. Bassett, recording clerk; W. H. Alexander, auditor.

The Missionary Convention.

The Missouri convention proper began on Tuesday afternoon and concluded Wednesday noon. Dr. Albert Buxton gave two thoughtful Bible studies on "The Message of John," and "The Message of Paul." F. E. Udell, chairman of the convention, declared at the outset that he would follow strictly the program. The report of the board was presented by T. A. Abbott and adopted. It set forth the present plan of work, which is to begin at the base of things and make the county organization the real evangelistic force. Annual conventions are to be held in each one of the seven districts, which shall be strictly educational in character. Men and means are the need. A summary of all of the state work shows: Men employed, 49; days work, 9,563; sermons, 6,864; other services, 2,554; churches organized, 30; Bible schools organized, 51; baptisms, 2,329; total additions, 4,221; money raised for pastor's salary, $30,820; for building and repairs, $54,123; for missions, $8,673; for other purposes, $20,268; total money raised, $113,884.

J. J. Morgan, who was taken sick in early March and has been staying at Idaho Springs, Colo., was unable to be present and present the treasurer's report, though he is much better and hoped to be back in his pulpit early in July. The total receipts from all sources amounted to $10,275.79, while the expenditures were $9,898.49, leaving a balance of $377.30 in hand. Brother Briney suggested that a telegram be sent to Brother Morgan and this was agreed to by a standing vote. President Udell announced that he was neither a doctor, lawyer, nor preacher, and as his early education in the address line had been sadly neglected there would be no president's address. He cut short all discussion by saying, "We will now have a song."

G. W. Muckley presented the cause of church extension in a new speech and brought us the gratifying information that there are now one thousand spots on the church extension map, $560,000 in its permanent fund and a gain of $7,300 on last year's collections.

Committee reports followed.

The report of the committee on state missions, presented by the chairman, James M. Philputt, approved the plan of eliminating the district organizations and making the county the unit of co-operation, thus bringing the work in all parts of the state under the immediate supervision of the state board; commended the policy of maintaining pastors at important centers until the work is self-supporting; called for a $50,000 permanent fund by 1909; urged the paramount importance of the churches observing State Mission Day, and falling in line with the Centennial movement; recorded an appreciation of the corresponding secretary and his work, and urged that Missouri, the banner state numerically, should become the first in efficiency, spirituality, and in the fund of inspiration which it gives to our whole work.

The committee on ways and means, through the chairman, W. F. Richardson, hailed the enthusiasm and numbers at this convention as an augury of larger ideals and more generous co-operation, recommended that the amount asked for the coming year be placed at $12,000, called attention to the fact that the only source of income was the offerings of the churches, and emphasized the importance of state mission day, for "Missouri must be evangelized by Missouri Disciples or it will not be done." "Nothing less than an offering every year from every church can meet the needs of our cause in Missouri." The report asked for the enlistment of men and recommended the organization of business men's associations or clubs for fellowship and Christian service; called for the raising of the $3,000 before the close of the convention to complete the permanent fund, and recommended that efforts be made to increase the fund to $50,000 by our centennial.

The report on "the state of the cause" was presented by J. H. Garrison, chairman of the committee, and which consisted of him, W. T. Moore and George L. Peters. It described the "health of our body ecclesiastic" as being "only tolerable," despite the fact that no cases of gross immorality or deadly heresies were reported and that there is "a forward look and a forward movement." Symptoms that there is a lack of complete spiritual robustness are indicated: (1) Our gifts are not commensurate with our numbers and resources. Many members fail to have any fellowship. (2) "The cause of state missions in Missouri has been a sort of Lazarus lying at the gate of the rich churches and begging for the crumbs that fall from their tables! It needs to be lifted to a higher level, and our churches made to feel that it is their work which they are carrying forward through agents chosen for that purpose, and that it is basic in its relation to all our wider work." (3) "We are far below the ideal of having the membership of our churches enrolled in the Bible schools, together with their children, and the schools themselves, in their methods and work, comparing favorably with the day schools." This is fundamental to permanent growth. (4) The languid interest in our educational institutions, as shown by the general failure to observe education day and in other ways. (5) The tendency to frequent changes in the pastorates is to be deplored. The relationship of preacher and church is "too often treated as a purely commercial one, and there is an absence, on the one hand, of loving oversight, hand-to-hand visitation, and fraternal admonition, and on the other of respect, thoughtfulness and tender solicitude for the preacher's material and spiritual welfare." (6) A lack of spirituality and consecration. "This incarnation of Christ in our lives, filling us with the Christly mind, lifting us up to Christly sacrifices for human needs, furnishing the world its new and needed apologetic—the resistless logic of holy lives consecrated to human good—that is the supreme need that underlies all other needs, and which, when supplied, would work as great a transformation in the church to-day as was wrought in the lives of the first disciples when they received the Holy Spirit from heaven, and were clothed with power from on high."

F. L. Schofield was elected president

Our Budget

—In various parts of the country our brethren are taking hand in the formation of Christian colonies or outing associations. This is the season for attention being centered in the latter. On other pages will be found advertisements of two of these. Bethany Beach is already an "institution" among our people of the East, and its praises have been sung more than once by F. D. Power and others. A new venture is the effort to establish a summer colony at Long Lake, Mich. This is backed up by some of our Cleveland, Toledo and brethren of the middle west. The grounds open July 1. Pentwater, Mich., where our Editor-in-Chief has located his summer home, is already becoming familiar to our readers, and "Garrison Park," in an early issue, will present its claims to summer resorters.

—L. L. Carpenter will dedicate the new building at Blue Mound, Ill., July 8. W. H. Harding is the pastor.

—L. A. Chapman, of Mechanicsburg, Ill., has resigned to take effect September 1.

—Harry F .Burns has just been elected president of the Ministerial Association of Peoria, Ill.

—L. Newcomer is succeeding so well at Eaton, Ind., that he has received a call to remain a third year.

—Robert Scott has recently baptized at Sweet Springs, Va., a young man who is preparing for the ministry.

—Our college at St. Thomas, Ont., has changed its name to Sinclair College. Fred Elmore Lumley is the principal.

—A Methodist editor commends the work of R. O. Rogers at Fredericktown, Mo., where there have been over fifty accessions in an evangelistic meeting.

—Wm. E. Adams takes charge of the church at Perry, Lake county, Ohio, July 1. The new pastor for Wellsville, N. Y., had not, at last report, been selected.

—On the occasion of the annual picnic of the famous old church at Old Bedford, near Blandinsville, Ill., J. M. Elam, of Carthage, this year delivered the address.

—We call attention to the half-page advertisement of "The Shepherd Treatment Company," on our last page, and refer the reader to recent editorial notice of same.

—The men of W. W. Sniff's church at Rushville, Ind., recently held a delightful banquet. About two hundred were present and it is intended to organize the men of the congregation.

—At the Lindenwald Church, Hamilton, O,, where W. H. Hedges is, a site for a new building has been secured. Four have recently been added and the children's day offering was $37.

—B. F. Stallings has removed from Oxford to take up the pastorate at Geuda Springs, Kan. He has arranged with Brother Sorey, of Des Moines, Ia., to hold him a meeting beginning August 10.

—Perry J. Rice and wife have been most cordially received by the members of the church at Minneapolis, Minn., and he is hopeful of good results of the work he has entered upon there.

Joseph A. Serena, of Covington, Ky., has left for a two months' trip in Europe. On his return he will enter upon the pastorate of the Central Church, Syracuse, N. Y., to which he has been unanimously called.

—J. M. Monroe, of Oklahoma City, has dedicated churches at Mountain View and Olustee. All indebtedness was raised. On successive Sundays he will dedicate at Manitou, Goteba, Sumner, Fairbanks, Piedmont and Quinlan.

—Among the converts at Auburn, N. Y., under Arthur Braden, were F. M. Mendenhall and wife, who was a senior in the theological seminary. They will both go to China in September as missionaries under the foreign society.

—C. C. Bentley, who has become assistant to Bro. Jesse P. McKnight, at the Magnolia Avenue Church, Los Angeles, writes that they hope soon to have the new mission work, over which he will have charge, a self-supporting church.

—The church at Atchison, Kan., has been getting ready during the past year for a meeting to be held by Scoville, Kendall and Smith, July 1. A great tabernacle has been built and the entire city is on the tip-toe of expectation. W. T. Hilton is pastor.

—J. Edward Cresmer has been asked by his financial board at Ashland, Neb., to hold a meeting for the church this fall because the one he held last January was so successful. The board voted to send him to the state convention at Lincoln, with all expenses paid.

—The North Park Church, Indianapolis, has just had another mortgage burning service. The amount was $1,000 and this is the second occasion of this kind since Austin Hunter became the pastor four years ago. A fund for a new building has already been started.

—On the first Lord's day in September, when L. E. Chase closes two years of service with the church at Armington, Ill., the dedication of the fine new church building, costing $12,000, will take place. It is to be a brick and stone structure, and F. M. Rains will have charge of the service.

—A. A. Moody, of Troy, N. Y., has paid $100 into the Benevolent Association on the annuity plan, giving it where it will serve him and the Lord at the same time. When he is gone it will continue to feed the hungry little ones. Write James H. Mohorter, 903 Aubert avenue, St. Louis, ,Mo., for particulars.

—O. L. Smith, of El Reno, has been elected president of the Endeavor forces of the new Oklahoma. The convention met in Indian Territory but before it adjourned it was in Oklahoma. This election is an honor to the Christian Church and calls our brotherhood to rally to the support of the Christian Endeavor leaders.

—The brethren at Bizbee, Ariz., hope to worship in their new building July 1. It is a seven-room structure, and is a parsonage and church combined. The erection of this building has been a heroic fight for the little band of brethren who hope to have cash and pledges to cover all the accounts. Daniel Trundle is the pastor.

The Missouri State Convention.

of the convention for next year; I. R. Kelso, vice president; W. F. St. Clair, recording secretary; A. N. Lindsay, assistant recording secretary; H. A. Denton, superintendent Y. P. S. C. E.; T. A. Abbott, corresponding secretary. On the state board were elected Brethren Morgan, Denton, Henson and McGarvey. The place of the next convention will be Sedalia, the time June 14-19. F. N. Calvin served notice that at the next convention he would make a motion to confine the convention period between Sundays.

We must defer any report of the educational period until our next issue.

A fine address on "The Work of God in the Hands of Men," was delivered by C. H. Winders at the Tuesday evening session and the question of the permanent fund taken up. Something less than $3,000 was lacking to complete the $20,000, and this amount was raised by pledges of churches and individuals.

A memorial address, called classic by all who heard it, was delivered by W. T. Moore, and Mrs. Petticord presented a tribute to the women active in C. W. B. M. work who had fallen during the year. S. J. Corey spoke briefly on behalf of world-wide evangelism, and J. H. Wright for the Benevolent Association. At the completion of this session a photograph was taken, which appears on another page, and the convention was at an end.

—B. W. Huntsman, who is the corresponding secretary of the Michigan Missionary Society, returned to his old field of labor at Adrian about the middle of last March, since when there have been a dozen additions to the church there. He writes that during the summer months they unite with other churches in union services. Although the city is an old one it has been lately developing in population and importance.

—The American Christian Missionary Society announces the receipt of another gift of $500 upon the annuity plan, from "A Friend in Washington." This amount will become an executed gift upon the death of the donor. In the meantime the society will pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. There is no better way of placing the savings of years to one's credit in the Lord's work, as well as to "lay up treasures in heaven."

—A report of the first year's work of the Central Christian Church at Uniontown, Pa., under the ministrations of J. Walter Carpenter, indicate that $1,496 were raised for missions, without counting liberal contributions from the C. W. B. M. and the mission band. All local expenses were met, and $4,000 worth of real estate acquired for an addition to the present building which addition is now being made. Nearly every department of the work shows a good growth.

—July will be a busy month at Northfield, Mass. A young woman's conference is to be held from the 5th to the 15th of the month, while the remaining period will be occupied by two summer schools, one for women's foreign missionary societies, under the auspices of the International Conference of Women's Boards of Foreign Missions, and one of "Methods for Sunday-school Workers." These two assemblies partially overlap. The general conference for Christian workers will be held August 3-19.

—W. A. McKown, Swayzee, Ind., has been in that field more than two years, during which time eighty persons have been added to the church, a mortgage for $500 on the property lifted, improvements made for an equal amount, and missionary offerings in every wise increased. On account of the condition of his wife's health, he would like to go to a place in northern Indiana or Ohio, in which he could give all his time to the work at one point. Churches in need of men are asked to correspond with him.

—A. B. Moore has just settled in his new field at Ashtabula, O., where there is a membership of 650. In his last pastorate, at Alliance, O., which extended over three years and eight months, 206 were added to the church, and the Bible school was more than doubled. During this period $15,975 were raised for all purposes, $853 being given for missions. The house was completely renovated at an expense of some $1,300, and the audiences were the largest in the city. Brother Moore leaves the church at Alliance in peace, and with the esteem of the membership and community.

—Charles E. Geis, Meyersdale, Pa., writes us that the mortgage on the New Centerville Church was burned on June 17. Our brethren there have a handsome little brick church built in 1892, and costing about $4,000. For fourteen years the church has labored with its different ministers to cancel the whole indebtedness. Several visitors from Meyersdale and Somerset were present on the occasion of this mortgage burning. Peter Vogel gave a brief sketch of the beginning of our movement and our progress in Somerset county, he being among the first to hear the plea presented by the Campbells. The church will hold a short meeting, beginning July 1, with George W. Knepper and G. Hubert Steed, assisting.

—O. D. Maple reports that the church at Marion, O., has not yet selected his successor. He closes his work September 1. In the meantime he is engaged in an effort to establish a church at Delaware, a town of ten thousand inhabitants some twenty-five miles from Marion, in which there are not more than two dozen or so Disciples. There is located the Ohio Wesleyan University, with a thousand students. There are many reasons why we should have a church in a town of such importance. If you can not send an offering to help in this work, a cheerful, encouraging letter will be grateful to those who have this cause on their heart.

—The fourth annual conference of the Young People's Missionary Movement is to be held at Asheville, N. C., June 29-July 8. This is an interdenominational movement and among the speakers is our own A. McLean and other brethren. It is a very helpful gathering, the purpose of which is to spend a week or more in uninterrupted conference and prayer, outlining plans for missionary work for the ensuing year, and as a training school for the leaders of the work of local churches and Sunday-schools. John W. Shackelford, 346 Public Square, Nashville, Tenn., will have charge of the accommodations and special rates have been made on the railroad. Those buying should ask for tickets bearing Standard Contract, Form C.

—M. S. Johnson writes us from Litchfield, Ill., saying that among those recently received into the fellowship there was C. W. Johnson, a minister of considerable experience in the Adventist Church, and Jesse L. Berry, a member of the same body. The former is a man of unblemished reputation and is regarded by his denomination as a man of ability. We wish for him every joy and prosperity in his association with the Disciples of Christ. Brother Berry is a practical printer, but he, too, desires to enter upon the work of the ministry. He could earn his living in part by his trade, while preaching. He is a good organist and choir leader, and has a family that would be a help to a church.

—Last week we reported the death of a daughter of Brother and Sister Cross, of Hope, Ark. The death angel has again come into their home, and baby Louise has now been laid beside Dorothy. In sending us the information Brother Cross writes: "Oh, how pathetic it looked—two little mounds side by side. As I write this morning I hear no pattering feet, no childish laugh—no sweet request for a pencil and paper—'I want to write, too, papa'—yet there is a sweet peace in my heart this morn. I know all is well, God's in his heaven and our little daughters are playing together over yonder. I resume the work again to-night. I know the Father is going to use me in rallying many to Jesus, and in comforting those whose faces have written upon them, 'My heart is bleeding.' Pray for us. May God's will be done in and through us."

—In a letter from George Marquis, of the Boston Church, he informs us that in the early '70s we had a small church in the town of Durham, N. H., and that at one time his brother, Alexander Marquis, preached for the church a year or more. In June, 1872, there was an annual meeting of the churches of New England held in Durham, the chief speaker on that occasion being Elder George Garrity. Allanson Wilcox and J. Z. Tyler visited and preached for the church while it was in existence. It was a farming community, and the people were much scattered, and, having no assistance from the outside, it ceased to exist. It is comforting to know that in the contemplated work in Manchester the Christian Woman's Board of Missions stands ready to support a pastor until the church is self-sustaining.

—N. M. Perry, Lathrop, Mo., reports that J. G. Creason, who has been very ill for almost five months, "is still in a critical condition, although some gratifying changes have taken place during the past three weeks. Several times he has been taken out in his yard on a stretcher, where, beneath the shade of the maple trees, he can enjoy the outside atmosphere and scenery." The church meets each Lord's day, however, to observe the Lord's Supper, and holds its prayer-meeting services, Sunday-school and Endeavor meetings regularly, and, as Brother Perry adds, "we forget not our obligation to the pastor's salary and to the various missionary and benevolent works of the church." There is a church, we should say, that gives evidence of its genuine faith and devotion to Christianity. God bless it, and restore to his wonted health their afflicted pastor!

—Our church at Henderson, Ky., has just closed its first year's work under the efficient ministry of W. A. Ward. The reports made were gratifying and showed a net gain of 150 to the membership; the total accessions being 197, of which 108 came in the regular work. Several societies have been organized that have proved helpful in stimulating the younger members to greater zeal and activity. The attendance at the Sunday-school and midweek services has doubled and more than $2,000 in money was raised. Brother Ward has also done some good missionary work at two points in the county, having had sixty additions at Baskett and nineteen at Robards. The church has appreciated his efforts by giving him a handsome increase in salary. We learn these facts from James H. Kerr.

Northern California State Convention.

The time approaches for the gathering of the clans of Northern California in state convention at Santa Cruz. This will be a notable convention for several reasons.

1. Because of the excellence of the program. Each of the sub-conventions has prepared a strong platform. Add to this the fact that the chief speaker at the convention will be Prof. Herbert L. Willett, of Chicago, who will deliver his course of lectures on the "Beginnings of Christianity." The musical feature of the program will be especially strong. The leader of song has not yet been selected, but Mrs. F. W. Ahlborn, who "sings like Patti," has been engaged as soloist.

2. Because of the great number of important issues confronting our brotherhood at this time, notable among which is federation, all of which will be discussed in some way at Santa Cruz. W. J. Wright and other of our leading men from the east will be present.

ri State Convention.

3. Because we will greet each other face to face in the immediate presence of the great calamity which has befallen San Francisco and some of her sister cities.

The councils at Santa Cruz this year will deal with issues fraught with great possibilities for the future of our work upon the coast. The date of the convention is July 24 to August 5. Write R. N. Davis, Garfield Park, Santa Cruz, inclosing stamped envelope for reply, for information concerning tenting or lodging.

Northeast Arkansas Convention.

The northeast Arkansas Missionary District convention meets at Stutgart July 10-12. There will be free entertainment. A large attendance is desired by all the brethren interested in the work. Those who hope to be with us may send their names to J. F. Whaley, Stutgart, Ark.

Bethany Assembly's Jubilee Year.

The year 1906 will be a most memorable one in the history of Bethany Assembly. This Chautauqua is the child of the Christian Church. It was organized at the largest state convention that the church, up till that time, had ever held in Indiana. It is now twenty-three years old.

During the past year people were present from twenty-three different states and the King's dominions. Its conventions and all of its exercises were one continued series of successes. This year we pay the last dollar of the assembly's indebtedness. It is our great jubilee year, and will be celebrated with joy by the entire brotherhood.

In honor of the great event a large amount of improvements will be put on the grounds, and a program made up of some of the most distinguished lecturers and entertainers on the American platform will furnish instruction and entertainment. Tuesday, August 7, will be the great jubilee day. Exercises appropriate to such an occasion will be provided, and the old mortgage that has annoyed us so long will be burned and its ashes deposited in the waters of Bethany's beautiful lake.

The school for pastors and evangelists, and the Ministerial Association school, also the State Sunday-school, C. W. B. M., Christian Endeavor, and Ministerial Association convention will be held during the assembly.

The undersigned wishes to thank his brethren for their kind response to his request for their co-operation with him in bearing the expense of a meeting in Manchester, N. H. Having to rent an expensive, downtown theater, in which to hold the meeting, advertise extensively, and pay for board, as well as services of evangelists and singers, and their traveling expenses, it is estimated that a thousand dollars will be required. A little over half this amount has been received. As the meeting is to begin July 1, may we not hope to hear, not only from persons addressed, but many others who would like to have a small investment in this good work?

neuk would marry me; and it was my firm resolve that I would marry no one else, for without her I felt that I must die unwed. I had long worshipped her as a bright particular star, too remote in her serene loveliness to be approached with matrimonial offers by any man under the condition of king. Nevertheless, one day, in an unaccountable fit of desperation I told her how I felt, and she accepted me. That of course changed the entire situation—changed the face of the world and the general scheme of things. It seemed to me that any reasonable person, saint or sinner, must understand that this entirely unforeseen and unexpected acceptance of my suit, on the part of Miss Ingleneuk, was revolutionary in its character and demanded an entire readjustment of all my hopes, fears, plans and purposes. When Miss Ingleneuk was ready, we went quietly to a neighboring town, procured a license, got married, and returned home that same day.

"Never shall I forget the treatment my wife and I received on the Sunday which followed our wedding, from those very people whose advice I had so conscientiously followed. When my wife sat down in the pew occupied by Mrs. Matem and her daughters, those ladies, every one, got up and took another seat. Miss Throstle would not come into the choir at all, so that we were compelled to seek another organist for that day's service. Not all the people were unfriendly, I am glad to say, but those who treated us so coldly had been my most intimate friends, and their unexpected frigidity almost broke my heart. I had been so careful to follow their advice in that very matter, had chosen for my wife a girl who possessed every quality they had prescribed as necessary to the ideal preacher's wife—with some other good qualities thrown in; and now—now. Excuse me, brethren, I find myself unable to discuss it even here—though months and years have passed since that unhappy day.

"At an early hour on Monday the church board waited on me in a body to demand my resignation. Brother Matem, as spokesman for the others, said:

"'It's no use for a man to try to work in a congregation where the people, young and old, have lost confidence in him. Whenever the time has arrived when a preacher's word is not better than another man's bond the time has arrived for that preacher to go. When a minister of the Gospel stoops to falsehood——'

"'But, my dear brother,' I said, 'I do not know what you mean!'

"'No? You didn't tell Mrs. Matem, as many as five or six times within the year that you had firmly made up your mind never to marry? You didn't say the same thing to Mr. Kleer—not more than two weeks ago? You didn't say the same thing, less than a month ago, to Sister Cecelia Throstle? Now will you please tell us whether your love for Miss Ingleneuk is no more than a month old?'

"'I have loved her longer than that, certainly, but—'

"'That will do. You are convicted of falsehood by your own admission. We want a truthful man for our pastor—one in whom we can have confidence. Wil you resign without words, or must we subject you, and ourselves, to the scandal of a church trial? In either case you need not ask this board to recommend you to another church until we see you have changed your ways.'

"You have my story, brethren. I resigned. I had been there nearly four years, and you can easily understand that by inability to get any sort of recommendation from them was a serious matter. Fortunately, I had, before entering the pulpit, some knowledge of my present business."

The Michigan Convention

The thirty-eighth annual convention of the Michigan Churches of Christ was held at Grand Rapids Fifth Avenue, June 4-7. About 120 delegates from outside points registered. An earnest and scholarly address was given to preachers, on their spiritual life, by L. H. Davis, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. The Ministerial Association held its session on Tuesday morning, with a most interesting and profitable program. "The Preacher and Current Literature" was presented by S. G. Fisher; "The Preacher and Common Sense," by C. J. Tannar. H. H. Halley also gave an address on "The Preacher and His Spiritual Life," emphasizing freedom from business cares and familiarity with the Scriptures. J. T. Ullom aroused enthusiasm by his splendid address on "The Preacher and Protracted Meetings," and W. A. Bellamy spoke on the practical subject, "The Preacher and the Lord's Money."

Most of the afternoon session was devoted to business, the most important being the corresponding secretary's report covering the work of the past year. He reported accessions by baptism 728, by letter 238, otherwise 224, making a total of 1,190; present membership in this state 8,500; number of church buildings 94, congregations without their own house of worship 17, parsonages 16, total value of church property $285,000; total receipts for all church expenses during the past year $89,444. The number of churches on the roll of honor of state missions 24, a gain of 7 on last year. In considering the condition of the field the clerk reported the new church in Detroit costing $26,026, also Kalamazoo at a cost of $11,000. The church at Traverse City had reduced its debt $15,000. The number of preachers on full time is 54, part time 12, churches having regular preaching 88. Every church asking for a meeting had been supplied with an evangelist regardless of whether they could pay.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, G. P. Coler, Ann Arbor; first vice president, C. J. Tannar, Detroit; second vice president, H. H. Halley, Kalamazoo; recording secretary, B. W. Huntsman, Adrian; treasurer, Jesse H. Smith, Detroit; Christian Endeavor superintendent, W. M. Gordon. It was also decided that the convention be held next June at Ionia.

After business had been completed a conference was held on "Advanced Steps in Michigan's Evangelization." J. F. Green, from Mt. Pleasant, spoke on "Strengthening Weak Churches"; F. A. Higgins, on "Entering New Fields," and G. G. Horne on "Enlisting All the Forces." This was followed by an address from Mr. Morrow, representing the Anti-Saloon League of Michigan. The evening session was occupied with two splendid addresses from G. W. Moore, of Ionia, and J. G. Slayter, pastor of the East End Church, Pittsburg, Pa. The latter spoke on "The Centennial Campaign," and gave a powerful review of our past and present position, and what is hoped to be accomplished by the time the centennial anniversary is celebrated in Pittsburg in 1909.

At the business session on Wednesday morning the following resolution was carried: "Resolved, by the Michigan Disciples in convention assembled, That we deprecate the discussion of federation as now being carried on by our religious papers, and respectfully request that in the future these discussions be omitted, and the secretary forward this resolution to "The Christian Standard," The Christian-Evangelist and "Christian Century." After the committees had reported, D. Munro spoke on "Ministerial Relief," and C. J. Tannar gave a rousing address on "Enlargement."

The afternoon and evening sessions were devoted to the interests of the C. W. B. M. Mrs. F. R. Thompson, state president, presided. The two addresses were by Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, national chairman centennial fund, in connection with the women's missionary organization, and Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, national vice president and editor of the "Missionary Tidings." Mrs. Harrison's address was a most interesting account of the mountain schools of Kentucky and West Virginia. In connection with the centennial fund the Michigan Women's Missionary Societies are planning to raise $3,500 for a new mountain mission, and this is in charge of Mrs. Ferris, of Detroit. The evening session was addressed by the same ladies. Mrs. Harrison gave a scholarly review of the beginnings of the Disciples of Christ as a people, in the work of Barton W. Stone and Alexander Campbell. She also outlined what the Christian Women's Board of Missions desired to accomplish by the centennial. By that time they expect to raise for this special fund apart from the regular work $100,000, apportioned among the states. This money will be expended in establishing a new orphanage in Jamaica, a Calcutta mission home, a station in the City of Mexico, a church and mission building for San Juan, Porto Rico; a mission building for the new work in South America, a new work in Utah, enlargement of the negro work, new mountain school, Chinese mission building, Portland, Ore., and the opening of a new station in South China.

The sessions of the convention on Thursday morning were given over to the interests of Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor work and a simultaneous conference of ladies in connection with the Christian Women's Board of Missions. Altogether the convention was a success and will be productive of much good. B. W. Huntsman, Rec. Sec.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

More of the Texas Convention.

The closing session of the convention was in the hands of our Juliette Fowler Home and Texas Christian University. Some sixty of these children were brought over from the home in charge of the superintendent and matrons. After debarking from the train these little ones marched up to town and boarded street cars for the auditorium. When they appeared on the platform the large audience stood and cheered them. Their singing and whistling of a number of the Gospel songs were received with many demonstrations of appreciation, some applauding and some weeping. They were asked to sing and whistle again and again. The Waxahachie Sunday-school gave them a bounteous dinner and picnic. It was a great day in the lives of these precious wards of the church. The reports of A. J. Bush, field agent, and Mrs. H. H. Smith, corresponding secretary, were most encouraging. The land note was paid, the home is out of debt, with balance of $382.42 in the treasury. The need of a new home for the boys was stated and in a few minutes ten pledges of $100 each were made, with smaller pledges bringing the amount up to over $1,200. During educational hour brief speeches were made by T. E. Shirley, O. A. Carr and A. Clark. Dr. Clinton Lockhart, the new president, was introduced and made an address outlining his plans for the university. He made a most favorable impression and inspired confidence in the continued growth of the school. Colby D. Hall, the newly-elected secretary of education, told of his plans and hopes for our Texas schools. It was a great convention in every way. Keep your eyes on Texas. Our leaders are wide-awake men and women, full of faith and zeal, and possessed of sunny optimism. We are to meet in Fort Worth next year.—G. L. Bush.

Cincinnati Letter.

The latest movement among the Disciples in Cincinnati is the organization of the Church Building and Aid Society. A mass meeting was held at the Central Church recently, which was addressed by I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., At this meeting nine directors were elected and about fifty members of the society were received upon the payment of $1 each, which makes them annual members. R. W. Abberly is president. The first work this organization will be called upon to do is to assist the Camp Washington Church in the erection of its building, the corner-stone of which was laid June 10. C. J. Sebastian is the minister.——The church at. Mt. Healthy is planning to build an addition to its house of worship this summer. They have outgrown their present quarters.——The church at Latonia, Ky., is contemplating a new house of worship, the work having grown beyond its present accommodations. ——The Lockland Church, after eight years of hard work in a tabernacle which is on leased ground, is now looking forward to more permanent things. They have succeeded in buying a lot 50x150 feet in a choice portion of the town and will build next year.—W. G. Loucks, Station R.

Cured to Stay Cured.

Mrs. S. T. Roberts, Clinton, La., sent a postal card request for a trial bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine to Drake Co., Drake Bldg., and received it promptly by return mail without expense to her. Mrs. Roberts writes that a bottle of this wonderful Palmetto Medicine proved quite sufficient to completely cure her. She says: "One bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine has cured me after months of intense suffering. My trouble was Inflammation of Bladder and serious condition of Urinary organs. Drake's Palmetto Wine gave me quick and entire relief and I have had no trouble since using the one bottle."

Drake's Palmetto Wine cures every such case to stay cured. It is a true, unfailing specific for Liver, Kidney, Bladder and Prostate Trouble caused by Inflammation, Congestion or Catarrh. When there is Constipation, Drake's Palmetto Wine produces a gentle and natural action of the bowels and cures Constipation immediately to stay cured. One small dose a day does all this splendid work, and any reader of this paper may prove it by writing to Drake Co., Wheeling, W. Va., for a test bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine. A letter or postal card is your only expense.

Nebraska.

The district convention of No. 8, held at Bartley, was a most enthusiastic one, though the attendance was average only. The people of Bartley, however, turned out in such numbers that all the sessions were fully attended. G. C. Johnson was elected president, and Harry Mitchell, of Hendley, corresponding secretary. District No. 10 convention was held at Kearney and was exceptionally well attended both by delegates and by the people of Kearney. This district is the only one that undertakes missionary work of its own to any extent. They have each year raised at least $100 to help some needy place. This does not in any way affect their loyalty to the state in general. They have the honor of being the only district thus far that has paid in the aggregate more than their apportionment for state missions this year. J. H. Darner, of Cozad, was re-elected president, and F. D. Hobson, of Kearney, was chosen corresponding secretary. District No. 9 held a short convention at Ord. Not many churches could reach the convention without large expense and therefore only a few were represented. They had a good meeting, however, and Oscar Sweeney was chosen president and O. A. Adams corresponding secretary.

The state board's summer meeting was largely attended. The report showed the work in a prosperous condition. State Evangelist Whiston gave a short resume of his work. The program was reported almost complete. W. J. Lhamon will be the lecturer this year. This is his second call to that work. Prof. Sutton will deliver another series of morning lectures on missionary themes. These are invaluable. Speakers from abroad will represent special work. We will need, all told, about $750 to close the year out of debt. This must be forthcoming the present month, as the books will positively be closed June 30. Churches not yet having sent in apportionments should be prompt. Remember the secretary's address is now 541 North Twenty-eighth street, Lincoln.

John G. Alber is preaching regularly at Liberty and Pleasant Hill.——D. B. Titus reports his wife's health improved at Longmont, Colo., and eleven added to the church.——Ground was broken at Beatrice for the new church building to cost about $25,000. The Bible school has increased to 300. J. E. Davis is the pastor.——Gage county has effected a county organization among the Christian churches.——N. T. Harmon has been in a short meeting at Manley.——R. A. Schell has accepted the call to labor with the church at Hastings. He will begin his work as soon as a new man can be found for Hebron.——H. H. Harmon, well-known and loved in Nebraska, is to begin work as pastor of the First Church in Lincoln. Brother Harmon has been pastor of the Tabernacle Church in Columbus, Ind. He recently took a master's degree at Butler College. We welcome Brother Harmon back to the state.——J. W. Sapp gives half time to Shubert. ——T. A. Maxwell, of New York, reports three baptisms, one by letter, one by statement.——D. A. Youtzy has closed his long pastorate at Plattsmouth and has gone to Scotts, Bluff county.——C. F. Martin reports one confession and one by statement at Overton.——State Evangelist R. F. Whiston preached at Rising City and at Norfolk. These services will close his work for the state until after the state convention. He will hold an independent meeting at Douglas during August and begin his work in the regular state work following that meeting. He and his wife will visit relatives in New York and Boston in the meantime.——H. C. Holmes, of Fairbury, has organized a band among the young men of the church. It is proving an attraction.——Quite a group of brethren live at Oak, in Nuckolls county. We are planning to organize a congregation there as soon as the way opens. The members will have social meetings during the summer and probably it will be possible to have preaching.——The Minden Church is meeting in the state tent at this time, while they are out of their church during rebuilding. They will have a fine new house. Burton H. Whiston is the pastor.——B. H. Coonradt has closed his work at Edgar and will go on to Osage, Ia., for a month or so. Mrs. Coonradt is improving in health.——District No. 4 will hold no convention this year. This is owing to lack of preachers in the district. The Woodmen of the World have unveiled a monument to Brother H. E. Motter at Craig.——S. W. Jackson, a former Nebraska preacher, recently held a very successful meeting at Douglas, Ariz.—W. A. Baldwin.

Nebraska—Ninth District.

The Nebraska ninth district Christian convention met at Ord, Sunday, June 3. This was the first convention ever held in this district.—W. A. Baldwin was at his best in his presentation of state work. Mrs. C. S. Willard, of Bethany, addressed the Juniors and Mrs. H. M. Davis, of Ord, gave many helpful hints on Junior work. H. M. Cox, of Palmer, and I. W. McGrew, of Burwell, spoke on Sunday-school work. Mrs. Willard, state secretary of the C. W. B. M., gave an inspiring address on woman' swork. A reception was held for Mrs. Willard at Mrs. Sweeney's and five new names added to the C. W. B. M. auxiliary. This gives the Ord auxiliary, recently organized by Mrs. Sweeney, a membership of twenty-six.—Oscar Sweeney.

Five additions constitute a part of the results of the labors of S. J. Short in Big Sandy Valley. He asks the board to help in support of J. L. Hall in that region and recommends him as a man who is capable of doing much good in that great field. It saddens us to say that we can not help in this good work. We are loaded to the limit for 1906.——W. J. Cocke has been in an effort to revive the Crab Orchard work, and this especially by leading them to build a house of worship. More than two years ago the house was blown down by a cyclone. He succeeded in getting the work started and a contract is made for the brick work. In a short time the house will be rebuilt.——The work of C. M. Summers in Carter county resulted in the dedication of a house of worship, at which Brother Sumpter, of Grayson, aided. He goes in a short time to the Big Sandy Valley and will give the greater part of his time to the work in Pikeville, county seat of Pike county.——J. W. Masters went to Harlan county for a meeting and was met at the first service by five Baptist preachers, who challenged him for debate. He immediately accommodated them and debated four days with J. G. Parsons at Wallins Creek. Eight were added.——The building at Jellico will not be completed until early fall.——G. W. Adkins, in Greenup and Bath counties, added eleven. A house is to be built at Fullerton.——Fifteen additions constitute a part of the results of G. T. Thomason's work. The house at South Portsmouth was dedicated by L. L. Carpenter.——D. G. Combs was in Rockcastle, Lewis and Madison counties and thirty-six were added. A church at Fullerton is in part made possible by his efforts and Livingston provided with a preacher and teacher.——The work of H. W. Elliott resulted as to collections in the receipt of $266.90. This, with the small balance on hand, was about half enough with which to meet the expenses of the month. We have started on that downgrade that is usual at this time of the year and from which we fondly hoped to escape this year. Brethren of Kentucky, $3,000 is the least sum that will enable us to make a decent showing at Louisville the last of September. We need most urgently every dollar that can be forwarded for the work at once.—H. W. Elliott, Sec., Sulphur Ky.

Commencements.

Kentucky University and the Bible College.

Commencement week at Kentucky University opened on June 8, closing with the alumni dinner on Thursday afternoon, June 14. On Sunday afternoon, June 10, at 4 o'clock, the baccalaureate sermon was preached in Morrison Chapel by Carey E. Morgan, of Paris, Ky. Mr. Morgan's many friends were delighted to hear him, it being his first public appearance in Lexington since he came to Paris from Richmond, Va., two years ago.

The College of the Bible commencement was held on Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock. Mr. W. C. Morro, who recently received the degree of doctor of philosophy at Harvard University and who will enter upon his duties as professor in the College of the Bible September next, was the principal speaker, making his inaugural address. Mr. Morro is an alumnus of the College of Liberal Arts and of the College of the Bible of Kentucky University, and is gladly welcomed back to his alma mater.

On Wednesday morning, June 13, the seniors of the College of Liberal Arts held their class day exercises in Morrison Chapel, which were very unique in character and unusually interesting. They consisted principally of the rendering, in Ben Greet style, of a parody on "Macbeth."

The commencement of the College of Liberal Arts was held in Morrison Chapel, on Thursday morning at 11 o'clock. The program consisted of the salutatory by Mr. C. M. Harbison, addresses by President James E. Ament, of the State Normal School of Missouri and Mr. Breckinridge Jones, of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company of St. Louis, and the valedictory by Miss Rosa May Starratt. President Burris A. Jenkins was present and presided at the commencement exercises, and he declared that he was in perfect health again after his late attack of rheumatism.

Immediately following the commencement exercises the alumni dinner was served in the gymnasium to a large number of alumni and friends of the university.

Eureka College Commencement.

The fifty-first session of Eureka College has closed. A large company of friends attended its commencement and enjoyed the many splendid programs rendered. The baccalaureate sermon was delivered by J. M. Philputt, of St. Louis. His address on "The Value of Vision" was far more practical and valuable than the subject would indicate. It was really a masterly address full of inspiring and helpful principles.

Sunday evening the large church was crowded to hear the closing exercises of the Bible department. The Lord's Supper was the central feature, as it should be; two graduates, C. R. Stauffer and O. K. Doney, presided in a most impressive manner. The sermon was delivered by E. E. Boyer, also a graduate, on "Preach the Word." It was a strong, loyal address. The simple primitive ordination, by prayer and the laying on of hands, was also most impressive. Five noble, well trained young men were ordained to the work of the ministry. They were E. E. Boyer, John T. MacBean, Ira L. Parvin, D. H. Bradbury and Harry M. Streibich, whom we are happy to introduce to the great fraternity of ministers. Professor Radford delivered the solemn charge to the young men.

Monday evening the faculty and board of trustees tendered a reception to the senior class which was a most delightful social event. Tuesday evening occurred the annual contest of the literary societies. These contests are of very high order and furnish a very valuable training under inspiring circumstances. The Edmund Burke Society won the largest number of points. Class day exercises on Wednesday were full of interest, life, learning and fun. The farewells, the prophecies, the music, the presentation of the new cement walk built from Burgess Hall to the chapel, were most enjoyable. This was followed by the alumni luncheon, served on the campus. The alumni meeting in the afternoon was presided over by F. W. Burnham, Decatur. W. F. Shaw, Chicago, was elected president for the ensuing year. F. W. Burnham was nominated trustee of Eureka College. A. E. Cory, class of '94, missionary from China, delivered the address on "The Relation of the College Man and the World in General." It was pronounced one of the greatest addresses ever delivered to the alumni association.

The music school gave its graduating exercises in the evening to a full house. Three graduates received their diplomas—Misses Ernestine Tiedemann, of East St. Louis; Katharine Garvin, Windsor, and Anna Ewing, Eureka. They furnished us one of the best concerts ever given in Eureka. Commencement exercises proper were held at the church Thursday morning. The mandolin club of the college furnished the music and Prof. Charles Zueblin gave the address, "Democratic Culture." President Hieronymus presented the diplomas in a very fitting manner. The degree of A. B. was conferred upon O. K. Doney, Urbana; Roscoe L. Ball, Toluca; Dean F. Blankenship, Patoka; Edward E. Boyer, Hutsonville; DeWitt H. Bradbury, Chicago; Lee E. Cannon, Lincoln; B. L. Colburn, Eureka; Bertha Lacock, Eureka; Jonn L. MacBean, Chicago; Nellie M. McGuire, Eureka; Ira L. Parvin, Clinton; Lee O. Snook, Eureka; Clarence R. Stauffer, Dixon, and H. M. Streibich, Peoria. The degrees of A. M. were conferred upon C. C. Sinclair, Poplar Hill, Ontario, and G. L. Peters, Joplin, Mo. In the afternoon the literary societies held their reunions, and in the evening occurred the president's reception. Everything was happily conducted and all look forward to a new and still greater year beginning next September.—J. G. Waggoner.

Dedications.

Collierville, Tenn.

June 10, 1906, was a day long to be remembered by members and friends of the Christian Church of this beautiful little city, for on that day L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., dedicated their third house of worship. This band of Disciples was organized some time back in the '40s by some of the pioneer preachers of those days. It has had the struggles of all pioneer churches, but has steadily forged ahead, and to-day has one of the most beautiful and well arranged church houses in Western Tennessee. It cost about $6,000 and when Brother Carpenter came there was an indebtedness of something over $900. When the people were appealed to $1,529 were pledged, making ample provision for a furnace and other improvements. The church is beautifully situated and is a combination building of cement and lumber, with fine art windows, and it is furnished in hardwood. The church has had many good preachers. At present V. R. Smith is the much-loved pastor, and his wife and family are all active in the work. The most notable meetings ever held for the church were by T. A. Laramore in 1871, when in two meetings 135 were added. There have been losses by both death and removal until at the present time the membership is about 100. The church is in full sympathy with all of our church enterprises and gives to our mission causes as she is able. Besides the church builidng there is also a nice parsonage, and the money value of all church property is about $10,000. The officers of the church are some of the leading business men of the city—Dr. E. K. Leake and Prof. C. M. Mathis are the elders and W. P. Boals and J. W. Thomas the deacons. E. K. Leake and Felix Kirk have charge of the Sunday-school.

Shadyside, O.

A new church building at Shadyside, Ohio, has been dedicated by President Cramblett, of Bethany College. Large crowds taxed the building to its utmost. Pledges and cash were received to the amount of $5,650, providing for the entire indebtedness. The building, with the lot upon which it stands, is valued at $12,000. It is of pressed brick with stone facings. Two short, attractive towers adorn the front, and all the windows are of stained glass. Within we find oak finish and everything up to date. Heavy, solid pews of polished oak will accommodate some 200 persons, but by means of two galleries, one at the front and one at the rear, the seating capacity may be increased to about 600. The rear gallery is separated from the main auditorium by sliding doors and with the space below it is partitioned off into rooms for the use of the Bible school. The pulpit and platform furniture, gifts from the sisters at Bellaire, are also of polished oak, the chairs being upholstered in leather. The Bible school and Christian Endeavor Society assemble in the spacious basement, which has a cement floor, and is seated with chairs. The baptistry and dressing rooms are included in the building, which is heated and lighted throughout with natural gas.

It was a brave thing, requiring no little faith, for these brethren numbering not over thirty members, to undertake the erection of such a beautiful building for the Master's service. But it has been done, difficulties have been overcome, and the church has the joy of worshipping in its own home. This congregation begins what promises to be a vigorous and successful life with a present membership of fifty-one. The church contemplates holding a protracted meeting soon. All the organizations are working well and are in a flourishing condition. The present officers are: Elder, M. V. Danford; deacons, C. W. Rodefer, A. E. Menges and W. H. Thompson; minister, A. G. Saunders.

Jackson, Ky.

The new church house at Jackson, the county seat of the famous Breathitt county, Ky., was dedicated on Sunday, June 17. The dedicatory sermon was preached by A. E. Cory and $2,700 were raised—more than enough to satisfy all outstanding claims. H. W. Elliott, J. W. Hagin, R. M. Hopkins and the local pastors assisted in the services. The church is a beauty, being built of the native Breathitt county stone at a cost of nearly $6,000. The larger part of the money raised on the dedication day was given by the Jackson people. The faithful little band, under the leadership of W. J. Dodge, deserves much credit for the splendid achievements it has made. A. E. Cory will remain for at least two weeks in a protracted meeting.—R. M. Hopkins, Louisville, Ky.

BUTLER.

Edward J. Butler, pastor of the church at West Rupert, Vt., died very suddenly on June 6. He had been in poor health for some time, and on the morning of June 5 he started out for a few hours' trout fishing, thinking the outing would do him good. When about three miles from town he was stricken with paralysis and with great difficulty reached home. Toward the last he rested quietly for several hours and peacefully passed away. He leaves a widow, a mother, two sisters, one brother and a host of friends to mourn his loss. Brother Butler was held in high esteem by the entire community. The writer, assisted by F. A. Manley, pastor of the church at Pawlett, Vt., conducted the funeral service in the church at West Rupert, on June 9. The house of worship would not begin to accommodate the people who wanted to attend the service and look for the last time upon the form which had been so familiar in that community. Brother Butler served as superintendent of schools in that township and had been for the past year president of the Union Ministerial Association of that section. Rev. G. W. Beckwith, pastor of the Baptist Church of Granville, Vt., attended the funeral and spoke as the representative of the ministerial association. He paid a splendid tribute to the departed, speaking of his strong convictions of truth and his earnestness, yet kindly consideration for others in his advocacy of truth as he saw it. Brother Butler was born February 20, 1862. His early life was spent at his father's home, in Tully, N. Y. He graduated from Homer Academy in 1884 and from Bethany College in 1891. He was ordained to the ministry in July of the same year and at once assumed the duties of the pastorate at Pembroke, N. Y. He held pastorates at Throopsville and Eagle Mills, N. Y. Ill health had compelled him to leave the work of the ministry for two and one-half years since his ordination. His body was taken to Tully, N. Y., and laid to rest in the cemetery at that place. He was a faithful minister of Christ. His brethren in the ministry, as well as the churches he served, will mourn his loss.

HICKOK.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hickok, wife of Capt. A. D. Hickok, died of tetanus on May 23, 1906, aged 78 years. Her home was near Norman, Okla. She was converted at the age of 12 and baptized by J. Harrison Jones at Wooster, Ohio. She lived a beautiful Christian life for 66 years. She was a daughter of Joseph and Sarah Powell, of Lisbon, Ohio. She was my dear sister. J. C. Powell.

LADD.

Robert Wordsworth Ladd, of Adrian, Mich., passed away June 11, after a long and painful illness. He became a Christian at the age of 11 and had been a member of our people for over thirty years. His widow, Mrs. Louisa Ladd, and his sister, Mrs. Lydia Smith, of Detroit, are also old members of the church. He was faithful to the end and beloved by all for his pure Christian life.

MILLER.

Martha A. Panderson was born in Willoughby, Ohio, February 26, 1840. The 5th day of March, 1857, she confessed Christ and was baptized by Brother Corvell. April 5 of the same year, she was married to L. W. Miller. For forty-nine years these good people moved along life's highway together. Sister Miller held fast to the faith and kept herself in the love of God to the end. The 30th day of May, 1906, she "fell on sleep." Her end on earth was peaceful; the messenger found her ready and waiting. The 30th day of May was the time of her resurrection. On that day she passed out of darkness into light. One son preceded her some years ago to the world of spirits, her husband, four sons and eleven grandchildren mourn the departure of a true wife, a devoted mother, a typical grandmother. Being dead, Sister Miller, in example, lives. Her wise and tender counsels remain. She still speaks in a still small voice in behalf of purity of heart and righteousness of life. From Ohio Brother and Sister Miller came to Illinois and resided at Sycamore. Their home for seventeen years was in Colorado. She died at the residence of her son in Denver. Those who die in the fellowship of our Lord are blessed. B. B. Tyler.

NAYLOR.

Rosie Ann Naylor, daughter of J. B. Naylor, an elder of the Christian Church at Prairie Hill, Mo., was called from service to rest May 20, 1906. She was 35 years, 6 months and 26 days old. She became a Christian in 1885. She had been a cripple since 3 years of age, her parents never with any degree of certainty knowing the cause of her affliction. She was possessed of an unusually bright intellect, and her musical talent was fine; she was never happier than when on the organ stood she was leading the congregation in the song service. She will be greatly missed.

W. G. Surber.

WEBBER.

I conducted the funeral on June 7 of Mrs. William Webber, who is well known here both in and out of the church, and whose family has done so much for the cause in this city. Her death is a sad blow to us all, and her many friends join in expressing sympathy to her bereaved husband and family. J. B. Holmes, Minister.

SEFTON.

E. M. Sefton died at his home, Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 1, after an illness of only three days. The cause of his death was gall stones. He was 46 years old and his life for the past twenty-five years has been one of the most potent factors in the history of this church. For twenty-five years he was church organist, fifteen years Sunday-school superintendent. He had been deacon for a number of years and was one of our most efficient and spiritual elders at the time of his death. He was a man of rare spirit, and his untimely death is a great loss to the church here and the larger interests of the kingdom. G. B. Van Arsdall.

REGIMENTAL REUNIONS AND FORTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY BATTLE CHICKAMAUGA,

CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 18-20, 1906.

On September 18, 1906, will occur the forty-third anniversary of the Battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle and the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19 and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notabe gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates, the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first and last time since they marched from its blood-stained fields, forty-three years ago.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long until none will be left to do this noble work.

It will be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

THE DUTY OF FORGIVENESS.—Matt. 18:21-35.

Memory verses, 21, 22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.—Matt. 6:12.

Peter's question, as to how often he should forgive his brother who should sin against him, betrayed a complete mistake as to the whole subject of forgiveness. He was trying to get a law on the subject, so that he could conscientiously obey the law and then, the moment the offending brother exceeded the limit of the law, he could fall upon him with tooth and nail. But the fact is that no one can be forgiving at all, in any true sense, so long as he is watching and waiting for the earliest opportunity when he may legally withhold forgiveness. Forgiveness is not a matter of law but of love.

In the Lord's prayer it is suggested that the forgiveness which man accords to his neighbors is the measure of the forgiveness which he may expect from God. It is not that man shall forgive grudgingly or of necessity for the mere selfish purpose of purchasing forgiveness for his own sins. That would be a shallow and insincere forgiveness which could be little pleasing to a God who sees and judges the heart. But because God is a forgiving God, we his children should show a like spirit.

The mercy of God is always limited by the willingness and the fitness of man to receive his bounty. So if God's forgiveness is to mean not merely an arbitrary remission of the just penalty for our sins, but a renewal of cordial relations between God and man, it must be conditioned upon man's fitness to enter again into filial relations with God. In this sense God can not forgive an unforgiving man. He could leave such a man unpunished, but he could not give him the divine approval and friendship without which forgiveness has no spiritual meaning.

The parable by which Jesus illustrated the duty of forgiveness shows the entire justice of withholding forgiveness from the unforgiving, but it does not show the utter inevitableness of such a course as it is in the spiritual realm. The servant owed a vast debt to his master, the king. Our debt to God is correspondingly small, for we owe him everything. If we are called on to pay to the uttermost we are hopelessly bankrupt. We can only throw ourselves upon the divine mercy and pay as many cents on the dollar as possible. But meanwhile there are little objections from man to man, real debts but relatively small as compared with our common debt to our common Father. It is not for us to be harsh or exacting in our requirements when so much has been forgiven us.

The application of this parable is not chiefly in the matter of what we are accustomed to call debts—financial transactions. It does not minimize the obligation of a borrower to pay back what he has borrowed. But it applies to the whole list of personal rights, privileges and dignities which most of us are too insistent upon as well as to the forgiveness of actual injuries which have been done to us. The man who thinks more about his duties than his rights, who would rather suffer injustice than commit it, who holds himself to a stricter account than others, who loves weak and sinning men as his master loved them, is the man who is little likely to fall under the condemnation with those who are unforgiving.

OUR NATIONAL HERITAGE.—Ps. 147:20.

"God bless our native land!
Firm may she ever stand
  Through storm and night.
When the wild tempests rave,
Ruler of wind and wave,
Do thou our country save
  By thy great might.

"For her our pray'r shall rise
To God above the skies.
  On him we wait.
Thou who art ever nigh,
Guarding with watchful eye,
To thee aloud we cry,
  God save the State!"

The wise man still rings true. It is not commercial supremacy, or the greatest navy, or provinces, or art, or any form of material prosperity, but righteousness that truly exalteth a nation.

Because of the relation our country sustains to Protestantism and indeed to Christianity itself, it is part of our religious duty to inculcate principles of patriotism in every heart. In the purification and perpetuation of the state we are nobly serving the Church of Christ.

It is unfortunate one should get so other worldly as to neglect his duties to this world. A prayer for the overthrow of rum and other iniquities is not very effective when offered by one who may but does not vote in harmony with his prayer. Christians should strive against the elevation of any man to public office who will not be an inspiration to our youth in mind and morals. They should restore the decalogue to American politics, incorporate the golden rule in its ethics of society, make the sermon on the mount a commercial text-book, and help America to become a beautiful type of "the better land."

Caesar beholding the magnificance of Rome, reflecting on its sublime history, and observing the indecisiveness of its citizenry at a time when the independence of the entire republic and all its future hinged upon immediate and resolute activity by the people of the capital, exclaimed: "For what city will they contend who will not fight for this"! So might a stellar observer of our planet say of America. This certainly is the apple of God's eye. In climate, topography, fertility, versatility, people and opportunity we are favored as are no other people. Let us contend against all satanic conspiracies against its peace, prosperity and righteousness, and illustrate to the world the blessedness of being peculiarly God's people.

So manifest was God's partiality to our colonial fathers in the war of the revolution that Benj. Franklin made it the basis of his resolution offered in the American senate providing that the sessions of that body be opened with prayer in recognition of those special providences that filled the banners of our armies with victory. This action was not taken so long after the events then commemorated that legendary influences could have either created in part or magnified the miracles known well to Franklin and other eye witnesses who, like him, could not be deceived by cunningly devised fables but immediately following cessation of hostilities. Surely after such testimony our real appreciation of America will be quite accurately expressed by our love for America's God and loyalty to him.

"America is another name for opportunity," exclaims a panegyrist of our free institutions. Here the children of poverty and obscurity have been seen progressing from the shadows out into the whitest light of publicity and upward to the most coveted heights of educational, commercial and political success. Here real merit and personal initiative break down all caste distinctions; we have neither hereditary peasantry nor aristocracy; the best is a sure reward awaiting the brave and true regardless of plebeian or patristic origin. For this all parents and the aspiring poor and lowly should be devoutly thankful. But these material are a small part of our real opportunities. Those relating to religious liberty and spiritual improvement are of vastly more consequence. Let us develop ourselves religiously as only we may who are free from all sectarian tyranny, and show to the nations the advantages of giving the Word free course that it may run and be glorified.

"Speak gently of the erring,
  O do not thou forget
However darkly stained by sin
  He is thy brother yet!
Child of the self-same heritage,
  Heir of the self-same God,
He has but stumbled in the path
  Thou hast in weakness trod."

Jesus taught, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." The vindication of his doctrine is heard at Calvary while he prays for his cruel destroyers: "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

Mere non-retaliation does not constitute scriptural forgiveness. Our Father nowhere approves negative traits, he searches our hearts for the positive virtues. We are not to simply let our whilom foe alone, we are to love and help him. Aside from the scriptural doctrine involved the most satisfactory way of absolutely and perpetually conquering a foe is to make a friend of him.

Most of us can forgive one who has wronged us, but it is extremely difficult for us to forgive one whom we have wronged. As to the psychological reason of this men may differ, but the fact is one of universal observation and acknowledgement. In view of it, it is well we take every precaution against injuring our neighbor, and when we do that we call upon all within us to effect atonement.

Some will say "It is impossible for one to be saved without baptism by immersion," and at the same time they are nursing vengeance against mendacious neighbors just as if Christ had never said, "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." We would not recommend speculations as to the possibility of being "saved as by fire," if either be left undone, but let us remember that men formulate the first doctrine while Christ states the second.

One of Gov. Oglethorpe's servants carelessly broke a rare piece of service. Justly indignant, the governor commanded the servant brought before him, adding, "I shall never forgive him." "Have you never sinned?" asked a witness. "Why?" answered the governor. "Well, I remember the Bible says 'Except ye forgive men their trespasses neither will your Father forgive your trespasses,' and I thought one who would say 'I will never forgive,' had certainly never sinned." After a moment's reflection the great man apologized for his immoderate language.

"If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses," is not an arbitrary decree or a vengeful fiat, but a worded expression of one phase of the natural law of life. An unforgiving spirit is one so unconscious of its own errors it will never attempt to make them white in the blood of the Lamb; it is evidence of an unregenerateness that in itself would make one an alien in the skies; it is accompanied by an inseparable retinue of evils that if admitted would change paradise into pandemonium. An unforgiving spirit is incapable of appropriating divine forgiveness and can not be forgiven though forgiveness rays out from the Father upon it just as his sunshine streams down on the fields of the unjust as well as on the fields of the just.

As Seen From the Dome.

waters, nor along its barren shores.

The Jordan is a swift, turbid stream, rising among the mountains of the north and flowing 137 miles through the Sea of Galilee and then south to the Dead Sea with a fall of 3,000 feet. It is not beautiful. Where we visited it at the place of baptism, and took a boat ride on its waters, it is perhaps 40 feet wide and varies from 10 to 30 feet in depth. Plenty of water for purposes of baptism. We saw Russian pilgrims going in for a sacred bath. One of our preachers went in both the Jordan and the Dead Sea, but as his name is that of a well-known member of the finny tribe it seemed fitting. Others of us had not reached the time of our annual bath. What associations belong to rivers, the Tiber, the Rhine, the Danube, the Euphrates, the Tigris, the Ganges, the Nile, the Jordan! Before us comes the vision of the hosts of Israel, and then Elijah and Elisha going over dryshod; then the multitudes gathered to hear the strange prophet whose food was locusts and wild honey, and who proclaimed the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. Here where our Lord went down into the water it has been always regarded as a great privilege to be baptized, and Greek pilgrims to-day are solemnly dipped under the water, and as in the olden time, retain their baptismal robes for their burial garments.

Bethlehem is the most interesting spot near the Holy City. Joab was born here, and Asahel and Abishai, but most of all Jesus. Justin Martyn, born only a few years after the death of the Apostle John, speaks definitely of the birth occurring in a "certain cave close to the village of Bethlehem." Origen, a century later, states that the cave and the manger were still shown. Eusebius and Jerome both attest the genuineness of this common belief. So 200 years before the Church of the Nativity was built this tradition had sway. The church erected in 330, the oldest Christian Church in the world, is very impressive, and is built over this spot. A cave is shown under the church where Jerome made the Latin or Vulgate translation of the Scriptures, and the tombs of Jerome and Eusebius are here. The Grotto, where it is believed Christ was born, is 40 feet long, 12 feet wide and 10 feet in height, with a silver star in the pavement and the words "Hic de Virgina Maria Christus natus est." Somewhere near the "Field of the Shepherds" near by, Ruth the Moabitess gleaned among the sheaves, and David, her great-grandson, dreamed great thoughts and sang great songs, and the Gloria in Excelsis burst forth from angelic choirs.

Bethlehem is the most pleasing town in Palestine. It is Christian, with only 260 Moslems in a population of 6,000. The boys and girls are bright and well taught, the women with their peculiar peaked headgear are comely, the streets are clean, the people happy and busy with their mother-of-pearl and olive wood industries.

Paul and the Women.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Can you not give us in The Christian-Evangelist a thorough exposition of 1 Cor. 11:4-15? My heart and mind rebel somewhat at many of Paul's statements in those verses. For instance, v. 5: "Every woman praying or prophesying with her head unveiled dishonoureth her head." Then nearly all our ladies dishonor their heads. "For it is one and the same thing as if she were shaven." It is not "one and the same thing" to me, nor indeed to nearly all men now.

V. 6. "If a woman is not veiled, let her also be shorn." Well, I don't want her either "veiled" or "shorn." And so on, through all the verses there are many things I can not accede to. It may be said that the instruction of Paul was given simply to meet a local condition or need, and was not intended for all places and times. If so, why did Paul assign such reasons as he did for his requirements? For instance, v. 3: "The head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man"; v. 7: "The man is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man"; vs. 9, 10: "For neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man: for this cause ought the woman to have a sign of authority over her head, because of the angels"; v. 14: "Doth not even nature itself teach you," etc., to end of the fifteenth verse. These are universal reasons which he has assigned, and if they are good and just and fair reasons, how can we escape innocently from keeping his commandments? Was Paul justified in assigning universal reasons for local requirements? It is not my purpose or desire to bring up the "woman question" again, but I am simply seeking light along the line here indicated.

Orange, Cal. A. N. Glover.

[We have no doubt but that Paul's directions in the passages above quoted grew out of conditions, customs and opinions prevalent at that time, and were wise. Nor can we doubt that Paul shared to some extent the prevalent opinions of his time on this subject. Inspiration did not lift the "holy men of old" out of touch with the times in which they lived, nor free them from the limitations of their age, on scientific or social problems. They were given to see the essential truths and principles of Christianity which in the fulness of time would work out the necessary changes in moral and social and political life.—Editor.]

Missouri's Scholarly Young Men.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Is it not regrettable that Missouri makes no place for her most scholarly young men? Nor does she retain those who come from other states. H. D. Smith is in Kentucky, it seems to stay; W. R. Warren is in Pennsylvania, with no promise of return; Burris A. Jenkins is presiding over Kentucky University, and the authorities knowing a good thing when they get it are not likely to surrender him; Ernest Garrison is president of Butler College and has made a fine record in a very short time; George D. Edwards is in Honolulu, where his fine scholarship may be needed; Brother Burk, a fine Missouri fellow, is in Peoria, and is making himself felt there; Earl Todd is in New York—he really belongs to Missouri; Earl Wilfley and the Brooks brothers (four of them) have gone from us, and there are others that might be mentioned.

We could not retain Hiram Vankirk, now of Berkeley Bible College, California; we could not make a place for C. C. Rowlison, now president of Hiram College; Richard B. Moore has gone to Butler; I. N. McCash, once with us, is in Iowa; W. D. Moore is in Seattle, Wash.

Wherein lies the trouble? Who is to blame? Is there any promise of a place in Missouri for the noble young men who are preparing themselves for the highest usefulness? Are we verifying the old Hebrew saying that "a prophet is not without honor, save in his own country," and among his own people? It is true that we have imported many splendid men, and we honor them; we do not know what our churches could have done without them. Many of them have become genuine Missourians, but, other things being equal, a man already adjusted to his environment ought to do his best work. Our Bible college, in connection with our State University, is now equipped to do a splendid work for Missouri young men. Shall we give them room? Look at this list: In Kansas City Brothers Richardson, Bowen, Wray, Barnett, Thomas and Kopp are from Illinois; Brothers Cupp and Bond are perhaps from Missouri. At St. Joseph Brother Good, the Nestor, is from Illinois, Brother Chilton from Missouri and the other ministers, I think, from other states. Pinkerton, of Plattsburg, is from Kentucky; Capp from Australia; Saxby, of Richmond, from Australia; Tucker, of Platte City from Illinois; Frank, of Liberty, from Kentucky; White, of Trenton, from Ohio; Brickert, of Cameron, from Iowa; Taylor, of Moberly, from Kentucky; Wright, of Paris, from Illinois; Marshall, of Hannibal, from Iowa; Kokendoffer, of Mexico, from Kentucky; Briney, of Lexington, from Kentucky; McGarvey, of Warrensburg, from Kentucky; Reedy, of Sedalia, from Illinois; Widger, of Jefferson City, and Philputt, of St. Louis, from New York; Brandt, from Ohio; Calvin, the Moores and Bartholomew, from without Missouri. Our editors—Garrison, of Missouri, was educated in Illinois; Moore is an Ohio boy, but spent most of his life in London, England; Snively is from Illinois. Of our college professors, Johann is from Germany, Buxton from the east, Llamon from Ohio, Sharpe from Kansas, Mrs. W. T. Moore from New York, J. B. Jones from Kentucky, Barham from Texas, and of all these we are proud and appreciative, but shall we not be hospitable to Missourians?

The Only Child.

I'm my mother's only little cat!
      Think of that!
Sometimes my mistress takes me for a call;
  Then mother says, "Clarinda, mind, my dear,
You're not like other common cats at all:
  So don't look pert, and don't put back your ear
That way, like any sheep. If they have tea
Be sure and sit as quiet as can be Until you're served. Don't tease nor beg nor cry.
So many kittens act quite shockingly
These days—and are so spoiled, so pert, so rude.
But I am sure that you'll be sweet and good."
And then, of course, I have to be. You see
If mother had some others, not just me,
Why, then I could do sometimes as I pleased;
And if I acted rude, or if I teased,
Why, then they'd say, "Clarinda's very bad—
Quite a disgrace! It's really very sad!
Her brothers and her sisters though, I'm sure,
Do credit to their mother. So demure!
Such cunning, gentle little things! Dear me!
How sweet! And what a comfort they must be!"
But now, you see, there's nothing to be done—
There are no others—I'm the only one.

When mother's ill she will not stay in bed.
She ties a handkerchief around her head
Quite tight and shuts her eyes and blinks and sits,
And thinks about the time she once had fits,
And how they gave her catnip leaves to eat;
And wouldn't give her—not a bite of meat,
And then I tie my head up, too, and blink
And sigh and lean against her, and I think
It really comforts her. Sometimes she'll say,
"Why don't you run away, dear, now, and play!"
But still I always stay, because, you see,
She hasn't any other—only me.

Sometimes I feel impatient and quite wild,
And wish I were not mother's only child;
I'd rip this jacket off—I'd tear my hood—
They shouldn't praise me so for being good.

I'd answer back; I'd get my paws all black;
I'd smudge my face; I'd rumple up my back
And spit and fuss! I wouldn't care at all!
I wouldn't only meow—I'd simply meawl!
I'd raise my fur; I'd thicken up my tail
And steer about like mad with it! I'd sail
On out the kitchen door and down the alley
Where common kittens live called "Tom" and "Sally."
I'd run, I'd scream, I'd prance, I'd yelp and play
As misbehaved and rude and wild as they.
I think no one would call me good again.

Sometimes I think I'll do all this; and then
I think, "Oh, no, I guess I'd better not!
I'm the only little kitten mother's got."

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART II.

CHAPTER XI.

When it was time to leave Nelsie Loraine's party, Raymund shook hands with stern Mrs. Omer, and thanked her for his being invited. Then he waited till Nelsie Loraine was somewhat to herself and went up to shake hands. The little hostess was somewhat embarrassed, but she took his hand and said, "I saw you weren't having a very good time while we were dancing, and that is why I played King William. It was just for you. I hope you don't think my party was a failure. I hope you are glad you came."

"Glad I came?" cried Raymund, "Oh, Nelsie Loraine, I enjoyed this party a thousand times more than I did mine!"

"I saw you didn't dance," murmured Nelsie Loraine; "you looked so lonesome."

"Oh, but I got to kiss you!" cried Raymund in raptures. "I would have sat in the corner all day to get to do that, and to know that you were willing!"

Nelsie Loraine laughed very heartily and blushed, and so did Raymund. Then he went to the Hands' House feeling like a prince. That, by the way, is a feeling that no artificial means can make last very long. Still, it is pleasant to feel like a prince though it is but for an hour. The next day Raymund's old suit of clothes was sent out to the farm, and after that, the youth "dressed up" when he went to the Omer mansion to take his French and Latin lessons. He found it much more difficult after Christmas day to be alone with Nelsie Loraine. Mrs. Omer had determined that the friendship between them should be cut short. Two days after Chrismas came a letter from Rhoda:

"My Own Darling Ray: Was Christmas very lonely to you? I know your letter was bright and full of brave words, but were you really and truly enjoying yourself? They tried to make us happy here at the orphan home. There was a tree, and a sack of candy and nuts for each of the 125 children. But, Oh, Raymund! I did so want to see you. And it was the first Christmas without mamma. I tried hard for nobody to know how I missed hanging up my stocking and crying 'Christmas gift' in the morning. And I don't think they found me out. There isn't even room here for a person to go off by oneself and think. If I could only be alone a little while I could bring back how our home used to look. Nobody has wanted to adopt me. I am too old. Just think! I am thirteen. It was so queer to have a birthday and nobody to know or care whether I had one or not! I work pretty hard, but I am glad I can; it makes me feel that I am paying for myself. I can help in the sewing. I sew, sew, sew; and I help clean the rooms. Christmas day we had a holiday. Yesterday, as I was sitting in the sewing-room and making an awful mess of my work, and learning to do it over, I made up a little piece, and it is this:

"I asked a mournful little child.
  'What would you have come true,
If I a fairy were, and could
  Three wishes grant to you?'
He said, 'As much as I could spend,
  And all my time to play;
And then—and then—that's all. I'd throw
  The other wish away.'
I said, 'Worth more than those you kept,
  Is that you threw away;
To wish your parents both might live
  Is more than wealth or play.'"

"That was yesterday, the day after Christmas. I felt so blue, so alone, that it looked like the poetry came easier than ever. Maybe some day I will be a poet; do you think I could make money that way? I must tell you about last night. The matron took us out for a walk into the city, to see the bright windows. And as we were going along I saw something that brought a little poem right into my mind. I will give it to you.

"Through the windows of a marble front
  As I stood in the street.
I saw a mother fit a dress
  To her child, to make it neat.
The girl, impatient, pulled away:
  From her lips cross words were given;
And I thought, if you turn from mother's hands
  I fear you will turn from heaven!"

"Raymund, you can't think how I felt that poetry. It thrilled me; it seemed so true, so deep. But somehow it doesn't sound as good now. 'To make it neat,' doesn't seem real poetry. And that makes me wonder if I can write after all, or if it is nothing but rhymes. I am only thirteen, though. Maybe I can learn better. But I haven't told you the good news. When we got back to the orphan home, who do you think was waiting there to see me? Brother Bellfield! He had come on purpose to see me! When I looked in the door and saw his homely face—you remember how ugly we thought he was, don't you?—I couldn't help it to save my life; I just burst right out crying and ran at him, and he took me up in his arms as if I had been his own daughter, and I laid my head on his shoulder and somehow it was like being back home for a few minutes. Then he told me all about your party, and about Jack's gift of the new clothes, and he said he had come to give me a good time. So, although it was late, he had a carriage brought, and he took me to a fine restaurant. I know it cost him ever so much—and Miss Glory told us he is poor. But he wouldn't listen to me. And when I wouldn't order anything, hardly, he just took the card out of my hand and ordered, and ordered. I was sick most of the night afterwards, but I didn't care; I just blessed the sickness, it made me feel so uplifted, somehow—I mean his coming. If you ever have a chance to help Brother Bellfield, you do it! But I know you would without my asking. Now, I mustn't write any more, for there is the big dormitory to be cleaned, and I am your fair lady who is to do one side of it. So goodby, and a happy New Year to the only one in the world who has my whole heart. I am your devoted and ever faithful and true Rhoda."

Sometimes it seems that the happiness of life comes in bunches, with long sandy tracks between the verdant oases. Raymund's birthday party, and that of Nelsie Loraine with its crowning kiss, were the two golden days of his three years' stay on the Omer farm. He passed to his fourteenth year, and then to his fifteenth, without any more parties, and without any more kisses. So I hope those who do not believe in kissing-games (I am one of them) will not begrudge Raymund that one kiss (I don't) at Nelsie Loraine's party. Raymund made great progress in his studies until the summer of his thirteenth year; then Nelsie Loraine and her parents went to Colorado Springs to pass the summer, and Mrs. De Fer told Raymund goodby, and vanished from his world. The following autumn, Nelsie Loraine went to boarding-school. Raymund saw her no more till June of his fourteenth year. Then there was just a glimpse of her, before her parents took her to Newport for the summer. Another year at the boarding-school followed for Nelsie Loraine, and she and Raymund had become almost strangers. In the summer of his fifteenth year, he was informed that the Omer farm had been leased for five years to a New York farmer and cattleman; the Omers were going to Europe to spend five years in educating Nelsie Loraine. Raymund did not even get to tell her goodby before she started, as she and her mother went to New York from the boarding-school. Mr. Omer, however, came down to the Hands' House the day before his departure, and kindly bade Tom and Fred goodby. To Raymund he said, "Should I take the farm back when we are done with Europe, and should you at that time need a good position, look me up. I have found you a boy in a thousand. Since your thirteenth year, I have allowed you to spend a good part of your time in studying, and you have never taken advantage of me. I have given you pretty hard work on the farm, and you have not once murmured. I have trusted you when you did not even know I was watching your behavior, and you have been the same behind my back as to my face. If I ever come to this farm, I want you, and you will then be old enough to be placed in a position that will warrant a good salary." Mr. Omer placed in the youth's hands a check for one hundred dollars, and as it was all Raymund had ever received from the farmer, it must be allowed that Mr. Omer was a saving man even "when taken at the crest."

Raymund staid with the hands till the New York farmer should arrive and make his wishes known. The "wishes" were to the effect that Tom, Fred and Raymund would not be wanted. The last day arrived. The youth with no definite plans before him, took a solitary ramble over the farm, and was reminded of the time he and Rhoda had gone to their former home to say goodby to the walls. Tom was up at the mansion explaining the prospects to the New Yorker. It occurred to Raymund that there might be a letter for him from Rhoda. He had been thinking of her all day. He went to the R. F. D. box, and sure enough, there was a letter.

The address did not look in Rhoda's handwriting, and Raymund's heart leaped with the thought that Nelsie Loraine might have written to say goodby. But when he opened the letter, he saw it was from Rhoda after all, though hastily written.

"Dear Raymund:—A lady came to the orphan home six weeks ago and took me to live with her. I have not written about it because I wanted to like it better before I said a word. I know I must do the best I can and not complain, but I can't stay here, Raymund, indeed I can't, and now they won't let me come back to the orphan home. I went to ask and some one is in my place and there is no room. They can't help it; they were so sorry. But Raymund, you and I are now fifteen. Couldn't we get along somehow? Maybe Mrs. Omer would take me to help with her work. I would be willing to scrub the floors and do the washing, or anything, to be near you. Oh, Raymund, I can't bear this any longer! I wouldn't be writing this if I could stand it another week. It is killing me. If you were here you would understand. I am so sorry to be a burden to you, I know it will keep you from going ahead. But I have given up at last. I call to you, my brother. Help me! In great haste. RHODA."

That was all, except the address of the lady for whom she was working. Raymund looked up from the letter with a white and resolute face.

"I will go to Kansas City," he said, "and bring her from that place." Where he could take her he did not know; what they could do, was hidden from him. Two facts overbalanced all other facts; in Kansas City, Rhoda was calling to him for help; and in his pocket was Mr. Omer's check for a hundred dollars.

Gleanings From Magazines.

"Pianism," Yesterday and To-day.

BY JOSEPH SOHN.

When we gaze upon a grand piano of to-day and compare it with its predecessor of 1850, or even of 1875, we can not but admire the long list of improvements and additions which have been made to perfect its form, to increase its tone and sonority, and to facilitate its action. As regards strength and durability, also, the piano of to-day is truly a giant as compared with its earlier predecessors. Yet, in some of the most important particulars, but little progress has been made, despite considerable experimentation. Now, wherein lies the deficiency?

The sonatas of Beethoven are in many respects miniature symphonies orchestrally conceived. Under the hands of a Liszt, a Tausig, or a Rubinstein, even the mechanical imperfections of the instrument were in some respects overcome, so great was the genius of these men. Under the spell of Rubinstein's playing, notes were absolutely forgotten; and even single tones—and that not always in rapid but also in slow movements—were so admirably blended into phrases that the sound of a single C sharp or B flat, for example, never even suggested itself. These men aimed at what the Germans would appropriately designate as gesammte-effekte (general tonal effects).

The artists mentioned succeeded in converting the piano into an orchestra. Even the compositions of Chopin, though by no means entitled to the classification of orchestral, generally demand a tone almost vocal in its fulness, and a close connection between notes and chords akin to that produced by the voice or a violin. Now, this fulness and roundness of tone and the power of sustaining it in equal volume or diminishing it at pleasure—true essentials, as we have here seen, of all pianoforte compositions worthy of the name—can not be secured on instruments as at present constructed. By means of tremendous strength, marvellous technique, and genius of the very highest order, the three before-mentioned pianists forced even the instrument of their day to do their bidding; and numerous were the devices to which they were compelled to resort to overcome in a measure its mechanical deficiencies. What a boon it would therefore be to our pianists—and their number is legion—if they were able at last to overcome the present pronounced asthmatic character of their instruments and to produce the effect intended by our great composers!—April-June Forum.

When a Girl Goes Camping—What to Wear.

Of the first consideration is the material for a camping suit. Don't get the popular khaki—it looks very neat and dashing at first, but a few days' association with camp fires and meals will cause an eruption of spots and dirty streaks from which it will never recover. Denim of a dark brown or blue looks infinitely better and wears almost as well, lasting two summers of hard use. Except for very warm climates a corduroy skirt is best. The material is soft and graceful and wears splendidly, and in the darker tones of brown and green is particularly suited to the woods. If you expect to meet warm weather use Japanese crape or the cotton material known as galatea for your blouses, for as these do not

An Embarrassing Order.

A man entered a well-known restaurant in New York the other day and beckoned to a waiter. "Bring me," he said, "two fried eggs—one fried on one side, and one on the other."

The waiter looked slightly puzzled, but answered, "Yes, sir," and disappeared toward the kitchen.

Ten minutes later he returned, looking decidedly worried.

"Would you mind repeating that order, sir?" he asked.

"I want two fried eggs," said the diner; "one fried on one side, and one on the other."

The waiter again disappeared in the direction of the kitchen. After a longer wait than before, he returned, his clothes dishevelled and his face bruised and scratched.

"I beg your pardon, sir," he said, "but I've had words with the cook."—Harper's Weekly.

Are More Earthquakes Coming?

No prediction can be made safely as to future earthquakes in any particular region. If any conjecture is warranted, it is merely that regions which are known to have contracted the earthquake habit are, on the whole, more likely to quake in the future than are regions which have long been free from seismic disturbances.

No part of the continent seems less likely to be shaken than the Mississippi basin. Yet there were disastrous earthquakes about the mouth of the Ohio river in 1811-13. Regions covered with thick layers of clay, sand, gravel, glacial drift, etc., like much of the basin of the Upper Mississippi, are less likely to suffer severely than those where solid rock comes to the surface, for the loose material acts as a cushion to deaden the vibrations which come to the surface from the solid rock below.

The movements which result from crustal adjustments due to the shrinking interior may be more or less periodic, even though their cause is in constant operation. The crust yields only when the stress at some place has become too great for the strength of the rocks of the crest at that place. Yielding in one place, or in one great area, often seems to afford adjustment of relief over a wider area. Earthquakes in California therefore are no indication that earthquakes are immiment in Denver or Chicago or New York.—Rollin D. Salisbury, in The World To-day, for June.

Vacation Time for the Children.

How joyfully do we all enter into the spirit of these closing days of school, just before the vacation time, when the children, the girls with their happy hearts as well as their bright ribbons all a-flutter, the boys restless, are wishing that graduation day was already in the past. The girls have been repeating their poems and selections over and over again, the boys in their rooms getting off with grand oratorical effect their thrilling selections culled from the masterpieces of statesmen and renowned authors. Then when the all-eventful day at last arrives, the day so much talked of for weeks and months, what a stir there is in thousands of homes over the land. The fresh, bright dresses and ribbons are laid out on the beds, and all the garments to be worn are looked after with care; the boys have been to the barbers for the most approved hair-cuts, and studs have been hunted up, the best neckties selected, and an extra polish put on their shoes, while now and again the mothers and older sisters, as they render assistance, say: "You'd better repeat your poem or selection once more, and remember to speak that line slowly, or that sentence emphatically, or those words tenderly," and "Don't you think you'd best run down and play that piece once more? I'm sure you'll have time"—all this with the mother's heart about as much a-flutter as those of the children.

When they are all ready and have been started off to be in time for the marching, and the seating, and all the preliminaries, in the church or the hall which has been beautifully decorated for the occasion and is fragrant with the blossoms of spring and early summer, with what loving eyes do the mothers folow them for a moment before putting on their best hats and hurrying to the gathering places to witness with pride and with joy the triumphs and successes of their "bairns." Their hearts swell with beautiful pride over their good looks and creditable appearance as one and another comes into sight.

All the days of weary work on the pretty gowns with their puffs and ruffles and insertings and edgings are now forgotten, and as the children come forward and accomplish the tasks assigned, and pass off the platform amid the applause of an appreciative audience is it any wonder that the tense look on the faces of the parents relaxes and with litle sighs of satisfaction they sit back composedly, their hearts filled with pleasure and gratitude?

Now the pretty groups of bright-faced girls and the handsome, manly boys are ranged about the platform and with grace and dignity accept the diplomas which the principal hands to them. The work of the grammar school is finished, they "have passed" and are happy.

Their most joyous, light-hearted childhood days may be over, but there are just as good times ahead when they take up the harder work in the high schools. Before that, the free, delightful vacations! With what glad hearts they are welcomed. How joyous to the old as well as to the children to see them starting off to the country to spend some weeks away from books, by the running brooks and dashing streams, under the great trees, in the woods, by the seashore, with the birds and the wild flowers enjoying a sweet, pure, animal life, and getting health and strength in the joy of it. ### Was a Vegetable Anyhow.

An irate mother went to one of the public schools several days ago and asked to see the principal. "See here," said the parent, "what kind of questions does the teacher of music ask? My little girl told me that the music teacher asked the class yesterday how many turnips there are in a peck. Why, no one could answer a question like that."

The principal of the school summoned the teacher.

"This lady says you asked her girl how many turnips there are in a peck." The teacher seemed puzzled. Then a light burst upon her and she smiled.

"I remember now," she said, "I asked them how many beats are there in a measure?"

How Gordon Answered the Bell.

There was a ring at the door bell one afternoon when Mama was up stairs very busy with her sewing. It happened, however, that there was some one down stairs at the moment. It was Gordon, who boasted of being a trifle more than four. Therefore Mama called down:

"Gordon, you go see who is at the door."

Gordon obeyed. He managed to turn the knob, opening the door just a crack as children will, and saw standing on the porch a rather portly gentleman in frock coat and high silk hat.

"Is Mama in?" he asked.

"Yes, sir, she is upstairs sewing."

"Well, won't you please tell her the pastor is here?"

Without asking the visitor in, Gordon started for the foot of the stairs. The distance was not great, but in that brief space of time the message of the visitor underwent in his mind something of an evolution, and he called up:

"Mama, the plasterer is here."

The busy mother gave a quick and rather emphatic reply, which Gordon carried only too accurately to the door:

"Mama says you are at the wrong house. We don't want any plasterer here."

The clergyman laughed heartily, and then sent in another form the same message. This time it was carried safely and secured the desired interview.

"Come!" Not "Go!"

James Gilmore, the missionary to the Mongolians, when near the end of his life, wrote to a friend, and in his letter he said:

"When I was a young man in Glasgow I thought I heard Jesus calling, 'Go ahead, James Gilmour!' And when I offered myself to the London Missionary Society I thought he said, 'Go to Mongolia, James Gilmore!'

"I made a mistake. He did not say 'Go!' but 'Come after me! Follow me!' And so he says to all."

A Case of Susie Adam.

Betty is 7 years old, says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion, dearly loves her school and teacher, and when at home talks extensively of the matter of her classroom.

"Lots of the boys and girls hate 'quotations,' but I like it awf'ly," she volunteered once.

"And what do you mean by 'quotations'?" asked an inquisitive elder.

"Why, don't you know? It's something the teacher writes on the blackboard, and you learn it, and it helps you all the week; and then the teacher asks you for it, and on Friday you go to the platform and say it."

"O! Well, make believe this is Friday, and do it for us now."

Quite charmed, Betty rose, mounted an imaginary platform, gripped her little dress, gave a serious courtesy, and said, with loud and elocutionary distinctness, "Susie Adam forgets Susie Adam."

"What if she does? Let her. Give us the quotation."

"That's the quotation!"

"What! Say it again."

"'Su-sie Adam forgets Su-sie Adam,'" repeated Betty, worked up and threatening to become warlike.

Neither questioning nor expostulation availed against this statement concerning Susie, and not until the teacher herself was interviewed did the mystery resolve into "Enthusiasm begets enthusiasm."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Lucy's Defect.

BY MARY A. GILLETTE.

She is not blind—she is not deaf,—
  She's straight, and strong, and pretty,
We think her so; we know her mind
Is clear, and quick, and witty.
And Lucy is a pleasant child;
  Her grandmamma says of her,
"In warp or woof you'll not a trace
  Of selfishness discover."

Of gifts and graces Lucy has
  A goodly share conceded,
Yet something is amiss; her friends
  All see how much 'tis needed.
Grandpa allows she's true and good,
  And owns he loves her dearly;
And were it not for this defect
  He'd think her perfect—nearly.

With face or form, with head or heart,
  There isn't much the matter;
But Lucy's ever busy tongue
  Will chatter, chatter, chatter.
Her brother Bert, this very day,
  With a boy's bluntness told her:
"My little sis, the thing you lack
  Is just a good tongue-holder."

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

What about our Charlie's vacation? Well, I'll tell you in a minute. Mrs. M. Imman, School, Mo. (just imagine living in SCHOOL all the time, summer and winter!): "I have read the Advance Society page for four years, and am proud that they are doing such good work, keeping up an orphan and missionary; and such a brave little missionary, too, I think. I send $1 for her use; may she live and do lots of good for her Master's cause, is my prayer for her." Mrs. H. J. Miller, Clarinda, Iowa: "I am a grandmother, yet I enjoy the Av. S. letters and everything helpful to the young. I enclose $1 for orphan Charlie's educational fund, and wish it could be more." Drusie Malott, Tai Ming-fu, North China: "You ask about my daily life. I hardly know what to tell, for it is mostly the same, day after day. We begin the morning with 'Quiet Hour.' Then comes English prayer-meeting at 6:30. Breakfast is at 7; Chinese prayer-meeting at 8 for the helpers; the remainder of the morning I spend in the office until 11 o'clock; then we have Bible Study Class; then a little exercise and dinner. When not too busy I spend an hour with the teacher after Chinese prayers. The afternoons are taken up with office work and whatever study I can find time for. At 4:30 I send the mail to the post office. Before supper I take a little more exercise if I am not too tired to walk. The evenings are spent as I may wish, attending services, reading, writing or talking to one of the missionaries; but usually I get very little reading and writing done. Thursday evening we have a real live prayer-meeting at the home of Brother Houlding, our director. After supper, on Tuesday and Friday, Miss Edith Gordon, a young missionary, aged 17, who came with her mother last year, and myself, meet with the missionaries' children in my room and read a story and have a season of prayer. Miss Gordon's two brothers are here, too; just one more brother, and the whole family would be here. Since coming here, the Lord has put it into my heart to gather together these children after dinner each Sunday, for Sunday-school. That is about midnight, Saturday, in Arkansas. There are nine children at headquarters, old enough to attend. Miss Gordon has the five younger ones and I the four older. We meet in the dining room, and it is just like a real American Sunday-school." (Several packages of Sunday-school papers have been sent me to be forwarded Drusie; two from a town in Florida so romantic in its name—it is called Kissamee—that I blush when I mention it. Drusie hasn't had time yet to let us know if she received the books, papers, etc. As soon as I hear from her I'll hand you her letter.)

Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "Are you thinking that I have dropped from the ranks? Then let me undeceive you by sending in my 29th and 30th reports. We were very busy with our strawberries, as we had an unusually large crop. Out of the proceeds of our sales, mamma and I are sending $1 for Charlie and $1 for Drusie. We need many more earnest workers like Drusie. I believe it is the mission of our Av. S. to furnish some of them; boys and girls of to-day, who are feeding their minds on the things worth knowing, and who will furnish the courageous men and women of to-morrow. With best wishes to the Av. S." Mrs. M. A. Skinner, Dorsey, Ill.: "I write to tell you if Charlie will come to Dorsey, Ill., 30 miles from St. Louis, on the Big Four, I will keep him as long as Miss Glory Aggency kept Raymund and Rhoda, and I am sure there are others who will be glad to have him a week. It only costs $1.96, round trip. I am sure the Ridgely Sunday-school will be glad to help him. I will meet him any time." (We appreciate this kind invitation, and would say something nice, but a boy over the way is trying to learn "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" on his horn. Nor is that all. I expect to go to a picnic tomorrow, and it is raining to-day. Mrs. T. J. Stokes, Carthage, Ill., wants Drusie's address, that she may send her Sunday-school papers. It is Drusie Reubelt Malott, South Chihli Mission, Tai Ming-fu, North China, and 5 cents in stamps on the envelope, of the lightest letter you can send.) Mrs. B. Higgins and Mrs. E. Adams, Dieterich, Ill.: "Enclosed find 50 cents from each of us for the brave little Av. S. missionary, Drusie. We read THE CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST and admire the courageous band." Donnie Swift, Billings, Mo.: "Here I am with the report I should have sent four weeks ago. Making the report is not so easy as keeping the five rules. I succeeded in finding you in that picture after so long a time. How are you going to celebrate the Fourth of July?" (Well, Charlie, our orphan, is coming to stay with me on the 5th, and I will likely do some of my week's cooking on the 4th, to keep him fed. There will be a great Chautauqua Assembly from the 6th to the 16th, and I won't feel like cooking much on those days. I won't need any firecrackers, because my gasoline stove is out of fix, and it pops and whistles and splutters and blazes like anything every time we light it up.) "If Ruth Day will come down to Billings on the Fourth and wear her Av. S. badge, we will celebrate together." Dorothy Brown, Medaryville, Ind.: "I have not written for a long time, but have been keeping the rules and have two reports to send. I read Drusie's letter about left over Sunday-school papers"—— (Well, sir, I just turned around from copying this letter of Dorothy's, and when I went to copy the rest of it, it was gone! I have looked all over and under the table, and in the pigeon-holes above it, and take time, I can not, to look longer. She was just about to say that she and her brother Earl sent me a bundle of the papers, which I received. Their reports are right here before me, and their envelope; but that letter is gone. You may say I was careless; but I say if that boy hadn't been blowing his horn, it wouldn't have happened.) Here's from our orphan Charlie, St. Louis: "We have just had a little shower, so I expect you are having an Arkansas rain." (And a picnic tomorrow!) "I am glad I can get away from the city once a year, anyway. We have not heard from the folks where Bessie stays yet. I hope I will get to stay with her a little while" (Bessie is his sister) "for I have not seen her since I came here, and that has been about two years and three months. I'll venture to say Felix is still shedding. Isn't he?" (You'll see.) "Our matron that used to be here, Miss Tena Williamson, came here on a visit the other evening. There is to be a boat excursion on the Missisippi for the Orphans' Home, June 27.

A New Emancipation Proclamation

Abraham Lincoln did not make an end of slavery in the United States. There are today in this country hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of white slaves. Some of these are willing slaves, but others are so fast in the toils of liquor and narcotic drugs that they are powerless, although they desire to be free. To these we issue a New Emancipation Proclamation. We offer freedom to all who wish it. Hitherto the way to freedom has been very hard, and the end has been accomplished only after a hard struggle, but we now make the way easy.

THE WHISKEY CURE

We cure the liquor habit to stay cured. It is not a difficult matter to sober a man up after a drunk, and that is all that many alleged "cures" accomplish. We do not regard a patient as cured until his diseased nerves have been brought back into a normal, healthy condition where they no longer demand a stimulant. In other words, we cure by removing the cause of the disease. We are anxious to treat patients who have relapsed from other treatments. We have cured many cases of alcoholism that had taken one treatment after another without permanent result. We have taken men screaming and fighting in the toils of delirium tremens, and within two hours had them quiet, comfortable, rational and ready to go to sleep. We have permanently cured every case we have treated, and every patient who has been under our care is enthusiastic in his indorsement of "The Shepherd Treatment."

THE MORPHINE CURE

Even more wonderful in its results, if that be possible, is our treatment for the morphine habit and other narcotic drug addictions. Not only do we actually take away from the patient any desire for the soul-and-body-destroying drug, but we do this absolutely without pain, nervousness or discomfort of any kind.. This sounds almost too good to be true, yet it is but the sober, simple truth. We have cured persons who had previously taken, in vain, from ten to twenty other treatments and spent thousands of dollars in their efforts to gain freedom from this terrible habit. We use no hypodermics. From the first dose of our medicine the patient has no craving for morphine; he sleeps well, eats well and feels well. If necessary, he is able to attend to his business. There is no other cure for the drug habit that can compare in effectiveness, in painlessness or general worth with "The Shepherd Treatment."

It will cost you nothing to learn all about our treatment. We send free, on request, a little booklet giving full information. Many of the alleged "cures" offered to the Public are frauds; others are practically, giving only transient help. We cure people so that they stay cured, and our treatment is absolutely painless. This can be truthfully said of no other treatment. For a copy of our booklet send your name and address, at once, to

We went on two last year. I wish I could have been with Raymund that night. I could have given him a conundrum he could have guessed. Up near Alton, Ill., there was a large telephone pole blown down across the railroad track the other evening. A little boy of 12 coming along saw the danger; the train was due in a few minutes. He ran up the track and made a signal flag out of his coat, the train stopped within a few yards of the pole. Many were the kisses the people gave him. Had he not been so brave the train would have been thrown down an embankment of 50 feet. School was out June 15. I'll be so glad to get away from the city to where there is not always noise of cars, wagons, automobiles, etc. It does me a lot of good, I think, and I wash I could stay longer." Well! here is that letter of Dorothy Brown's, and where it came from I don't know. It is right here in front of my eyes. Maybe it was stuck into Charlie's letter. Well, it says just what I remembered, and adds, "I may have more papers to send to Drusie next time." The present matron of the orphan home, you will remember, is Mrs. B. R. Brown, St. Louis: "Your card received, and Charles will be sent to you at the appointed time. I have heard from those who have care of Bessie. Charlie will stop to see his sister on his return trip, as they are glad to give the two children that pleasure. I am sending you $5 from Mr. Liesch, Greenville, Ill., for Charlie's educational fund. I am making an effort to add more to the fund, and think if your plans were formulated I might be able to do more." (In two weeks I will have something to say about Charlie's education; our new Honor List will also appear; but everybody can see that our space is all gone now.)

During revival meetings every home for miles around should be supplied with CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS. Let ministers and others interested write us for special rates.

Unless you use Gloria in Excelsis, it makes little difference what book you select. This imperial song book may be bought of us for $5, $6.50, $8, $9.50 or $12 per dozen, or at $40, $50, $65, $75 or $95 per 100—owing to the bindings selected and whether the unabridged or abridged form is ordered.

Some have written us concerning the enlarged picture of our Editor, who are isolated from our brethren and can not get new subscribers. While the regular terms are one picture to each $3 for a renewal and one new subscriber, we will send the picture to these brethren for $1 cash, or for $3 to be credited to their subscription provided it will pay for 1907 or beyond.

The Wabash has been selected as the route of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST special to the Buffalo convention. It will leave St. Louis at high noon October 11. It will arrive in the convention city in time for us to secure our rooms and "do" Niagara before the opening session Friday evening. Special service will be secured from Omaha, Des Moines, Kansas City and other points from the west. No matter from where you start get to the Wabash soon as possible and join our band of Christian enthusiasts. Low rates and the best of service over the Wabash.

In his Bible school literature Bro. W. W. Dowling illustrates the Bible doctrine of the renewing power of the Word. Though a veteran in experience, there breathes through his pages the buoyancy and sanguineness of youth. His writings are found only in our publications. Their use is proof that any school has "arrived." Send for sample. They cost no more than other and inferior kinds.

None of our thinking preachers who also read the best new books as well as the proven old ones fear the dead line under 70. We handle all the best books. Our readers get such discounts as do in themselves more than pay for the paper. Let us be your book sellers. Open an account with us, we will be pleased to replenish your library at lowest prices, and you may settle at your convenience.

Many express surprise that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S subscription list should grow so rapidly immediately following the recent fierce onslaughts and misrepresentations by contemporaries. Had friends simply been alarmed our power for good would have been crippled, but hundreds of earnest hearted Christians would not have this advocate of primitive Christianity silenced and began introducing it into new homes, and now it has the largest circulation in its history, and is rapidly gaining. Among this week's clubs are: Indianapolis, Ind., L. E. Murray, minister, 3; Sherman, Texas, J. H. Fuller, minister, 3; Washington, Pa., Oscar Riley, pastor, 6; Jacksonville, Ill., R. F. Thrapp, pastor, 26; Sweetwater, Texas, J. S. Douthitt, minister, 4.
